Mr. BRODHEAD. At the extra session of the Senate in 1851, I heard you, Mr. President, (Mr. ATCHISON in the chair,) say it was the last time; and I could not understand till this morning why it was that my friend from Iowa [Mr. DODGE] was so anxious at the last night of the last session to have a resolution passed, giving the sum of between twenty and thirty thousand dollars to the employees. I now understand it. I can comprehend his feelings. I believe he said he was dragooned and bedeviled and hunted down by men, women, and children. How much do you think we paid under this resolution?

Mr. BADGER. Fifty thousand dollars?

Mr. BRODHEAD. We paid about $28,000. The plain honest people throughout the country, who work as hard as our employees, think that $30,000 ought to be enough altogether. But, sir, this is extra compensation. I know the officers of the Senate are most worthy officers, and the most accommodating gentlemen that I was ever associated with. I am willing to give them a liberal compensation, but it is a miserable system of paying them about $30,000 extra at the close of a session, and on the last night of the session. But it will never come to an end.

Mr. BADGER. I wish to say one word about this "last time" to which Senators have alluded.

Mr. BUTLER. "Henceforth." [Laughter.]

Mr. BADGER. "Henceforth;" I change the word. What the Senator said is correct, but he forgets one part of it. The Senator from Indiana, [Mr. BRIGHT,] at the session before the last, said he would yield for that time, but at the commencement of the next session he would introduce a resolution for revising and increasing the salaries, and he was assured if he did so he would receive the entire support of the Senate. He omitted it at that session, and he explained to me the reason, that it was not a suitable time to introduce it, when we had adopted a provision in the appropriation bill making a temporary increase of the salaries of most of the subordinate employees of the Government. That was the reason why he did not introduce it.

Mr. CHASE. I am opposed generally to this doctrine of "henceforth." I do not believe in it as it was explained the other day by the Senator from North Carolina. That which is fit to be done is fit to be done now; and that which is right should be insisted on at all times. If a policy is expedient, it is expedient that it should be carried out now and at all times.

My friend from North Carolina has said that this is an expiring system. I think it is a wrong system, and I agree in that with the Senator from Illinois, and with the other Senators who have spoken on the subject to day. If it is wrong, it should be discontinued, and I know of no time so proper for its discontinuance as the present; and therefore, for the purpose of testing the sense of the Senate upon that, I desire to submit this amendment:

Provided, That hereafter no allowance of any kind, beyond their regular compensation, shall be made to any officer of the Senate.

Mr. BADGER. Is it in order to move to amend that amendment?

The PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. BADGER. Then I move to add the words "unless directed by the Senate." I presume the honorable Senator from Ohio does not mean to say, that if the Senate should direct the payment of the extra allowance, the Committee on Contingent Expenses shall not pay it. Now, let us look at this case. The Senator's amendment provides that hereafter no extra allowance shall be made. Suppose that at the next session an extra allowance is ordered. The Senator certainly does not mean, if that is ordered by the Senate, and paid by the Secretary out of the contingent fund, that he shall lose the money. It unquestionably means nothing but this: that no extra allowance shall be paid unless the Senate direct it. If it means that, say it. I submit the amendment to make the proviso consistent with the state of the law.

Mr. CHASE. I am quite aware that the Senate, at the next session, may, if they choose, notwithstanding this proviso, grant the extra allowance; but the object of the proviso, I suppose, cannot be mistaken. It is to declare that in the judgment of the Senate the system is wrong, and ought to be discontinued. We have heretofore, upon almost every occasion, as is well known, when propositions for granting extra allowance have been made, been told it is the last time. Now, I wish to put it upon record that it is the last time. We all know very well that it is perfectly competent for the Senate at the next session, if they see fit, to overrule or rescind the proviso. They may do that; but unless it is adopted there will be nothing to indicate that it is the understanding of the Senate that this system ought to be discontinued. On the contrary, if the proviso be adopted now, in my judgment, the system will be discontinued. If it is not adopted, the Senate say in effect that the system shall be continued. I hope that the Senator from North Carolina, inasmuch as he says his amendment will not affect the case at all, will not press it.

Mr. BADGER. I think my proposed amendment does affect the case greatly; for the amendment of the honorable Senator, as it stands, declares that no payment shall be made, whether directed by the Senate or not. Undoubtedly that is so, for it says no payment "shall be made," without any qualification whatever. Now I deny the power of the Senate to do that, and I deny the propriety of doing it. If, as the Senator says, it does not mean that, why not make it speak what it does mean, that no payment shall be made hereafter unless the Senate direct it? I think he admits that if the Senate does direct it the payment must be made. It is mere brutum fulmen to put there a declaration that no payment shall be made hereafter of any extra allowance or compensation, when the Senator knows perfectly well that if the proviso is adopted the extra allowance can be made if the Senate choose, and will be paid in the manner in which it has been done heretofore. Therefore, I think, in order that we may not stultify ourselves by undertaking by the proviso to tie our own hands, we ought to adopt my amendment. I admit that after the amendment to the amendment is adopted, it will present rather an extraordinary spectacle, but not half as extraordinary as the amendment in its present shape. It is not an amendment declaratory of a purpose; it is not an amendment declaratory of the intentions or judgment of the Senate; it is a peremptory and mandatory proviso that hereafter no additional compensation shall be paid. Whom does it limit? It proposes to limit somebody. If it limits anybody it must be the Senate, for nobody else has assumed any authority to order the payments but the Senate. It is said that we do not pretend to limit the Senate. Then say so expressly upon the face of the amendment. Suppose the honorable Senator should add a proviso to a bill relating to the salaries of officers, that hereafter no salary should be paid to any officer, greater than the salary allowed in that bill, when the officer could receive no salary except under that or some subsequent law. Does not the Senator see that it would be vain and nugatory? I am sincere about this matter, and I should be very sorry to have such a proviso appended to the resolution. I think it places the Senate in a very absurd position. It uses the word "shall" as applied to the Senate or somebody else. It is admitted that nobody has anything to do with it but the Senate, and it undertakes to say that the Senate hereafter shall not do a particular thing. We thus undertake not only to say that we shall not do it, but that no Senate hereafter shall do it. I cannot see the propriety of it. I believe, myself, that when the Committee on Retrenchment reports at the next session, the system they report will be adopted, and that will put an end to this business. But I would rather the system should continue forever than adopt such a proviso as is proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CHASE. Every law is subject to repeal; every rule is subject to alteration. The Senate, if they see fit, may proceed in disregard of their rules, by unanimous consent. They cannot disregard a law which they impose upon themselves, except by unanimous consent. It is true that this amendment will become the rule of the Senate unless it is repealed. Therefore I desire its adoption because I know it will constitute a rule, and because I know that unless it is adopted we shall continue to be found in precisely the same situation as at the last night of last session, and the same appeals will be made to us, and we shall be under the duress of which Senators have complained.

I offer the amendment because I think it is right, and because I think it is due to us that we should arrest this system. I have no complaint to make of Senators who differ with me, and who regard this as a fit and proper system. The honorable Senator from North Carolina has said frankly and explicitly that he approves the system in itself. Now, if the Senate approve the system in itself, they will show it by their vote, in adding to my amendment the amendment which he proposes, and thereby reduce it to a nullity. If, on the contrary, the Senate is of opinion that the system should be discontinued, and concur with me in that, and do not concur with the Senator from North Carolina, they will reject his amendment and adopt mine. It is simply a question of difference as to policy. I am unfortunate in differing with a Senator for whom I have so great respect; but differing as I do from him, I think it proper, and feel bound to present the views which I entertain on the subject.

Mr. BADGER. I wish to correct one error into which the Senator has fallen. Although I have been a friend of that system, and think it the best, I do not choose to stand in opposition to the sense of the Senate if a change is determined upon. I am willing that the system shall be discontinued, not because I think it is wrong, not because I do not think it is good in itself, but because it is the subject of complaint, and liable to misapprehension and misconstruction. But I do object to putting a proviso of this kind to the resolution, which my friend from Iowa withdrew at my earnest solicitation, because it places us in a ridiculous attitude before the country. If we cannot trust our own firmness and decision, without a pledge in the form of a resolution to control our action, let us confess our imbecility, and give way to somebody to correct it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I hope the honorable Senator from Ohio will have more firmness than either the Senator from Iowa or myself have shown in offering an amendment and then withdrawing it. I hope he will not withdraw the proviso. I confess I admire the apparent earnestness and frankness with which the honorable Senator from North Carolina has argued this question. The real point at issue is this: shall this abuse be discontinued or not? Whenever we have attempted to arrest this practice towards the end of a session, we have been invariably told that it will not do to stop it at that time, because the employees have been engaged, and have worked under the expectation of getting it; that we must give notice at the beginning of a session that we are not to make these allowances; that there was an implied obligation to grant it at the end of the session. That argument invariably prevails when objection is made to the adoption of a resolution towards the close of a session. Then the advocates of the system, when a proposition is made to give notice, think it is very unbecoming to give such a notice, and say that we must have firmness when the time comes at the end of the session, to resist and stop the abuse. Thus by one course of argument at the opening of the session, and by another course of argument at the close of the session, the system has been extended till it has reached now the character of an intolerable abuse. I hope we will adopt the amendment and give the notice. I believe that is the object of the Senator from Ohio by his amendment. The effect of the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina, is to carry the implication that hereafter we will grant the extra allowance.

Mr. BADGER. No; but that it must be paid if we do.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I understand the argument of the Senator upon that subject; I think it would be an improvement of "Chitty on Special Pleading." The proviso is, that hereafter no allowance shall be made. If that proviso be adopted there is a notice that our employees are not to expect it, and if they do they will not get it. Then the amendment to the amendment that the allowance shall not be made unless authorized by the Senate carries the implication with it that we will pay it hereafter as we have on every former occasion. Hence, the question is now distinctly stated whether or not we will put an end to this abuse, and we arrive at that distinct issue by rejecting the amendment to the amendment, and standing firmly by the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I trust the amendment to the amendment will be rejected, and that we shall adopt the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, although I yielded to the solicitation of my friend from North Carolina, and thus showed his power over me. It is not the first time that I have yielded to that power. But I look upon the amendment just as I do upon the amendments made to appropriations for custom-house buildings. Congress has the power to go on and appropriate its dollars ad infinitum, I know. When a bill is before us granting money for the construction of a custom-house, a proviso is always added that the expenditure shall not exceed the appropriation, and my friend from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] has almost worn out his fingers drawing up such provisoes. But we know that Congress has power to override them. I look upon them as a proclamation to those engaged in erecting the custom-houses to keep within the amount if they can, for they will have a hard fight to get any more dollars out of the Treasury in that way. But this question is now up, and the action of the Senate is to be had, and I do believe that the precise inference will be drawn which the Senator from Illinois has suggested, if the amendment is rejected, and my friend from North Carolina who has been in the habit of triumphing over us, will triumph in the same way again, and everybody will get the money hereafter, who has been accustomed to get it, and it will go even to the printers and printers' clerks. I hope my friend from North Carolina will yield to me in this small matter, and cease to battle with me. I have given up to him once, and I now call on him to give way and vote for the proviso.

Mr. BADGER. Nothing would gratify me more than to have an opportunity of yielding to my friend, but he must remember that this is not the proper place, in propria loco; things must be done in the right place. Now, he will recollect that he made his proposition, and at my appeal he kindly and generously withdrew it. His own heart, to which he then yielded, suggested to him that the proposition was a wrong one; but unfortunately he has allowed the hard-hearted reasoning of the Senator from Ohio, supported by the unfeeling argumentation of the Senator from Illinois, to induce him to resist the impulses of his heart, and to resort to the stringent operation of another influence. Now, Mr. President, such being the case, I cannot yield to him, because I should be doing my friend wrong. It would aid him in displacing himself from the elevated position which he just now occupied. [Laughter.] The argument of my friend refers to the cases of limitations in regard to custom-houses. Whenever it is necessary to make an increase of the appropriation is it refused? Never; and it never ought to be, for if the custom-house ought to be built, and the sum first appropriated turns out to be inadequate, how absurd it is to say that we will not appropriate the money to complete it; that we will give no more because we said we would give no more. So here my friend must be aware that if the Committee on Retrenchment report a system upon this subject, and it should be adopted, the extra compensation will be done away with; but if it should not be adopted, he knows that the Senate will order the extra compensation, so that the amendment is useless. I beg him to fall back upon the position of generous noble-heartedness which he occupied a little while ago.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I will say to the Senator that it was my judgment which was influenced to withdrew the amendment and not my heart. I withdrew it because I had a regard for the business of the Senate, and did not wish at the eleventh hour of the session to consume time by going into these matters. But, sir, I am satisfied that good will grow out of the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, notwithstanding the argument of my friend from North Carolina. I do consider that whatever Committee on Retrenchment is formed at the next session, it will regard the adoption of the proviso as an instruction. If it is voted down, the committee will just go on as it did at the last session, and precisely the same scenes will be enacted at the close of the session. It is not the first instance in which my friend from North Carolina has had a triumph over me. In all the little matters of books, constitutions, &c., he has triumphed over me. He has almost always triumphed over me by appeals, if not by votes. I certainly do not blame him.

Mr. BADGER. I never had a triumph over my friend except in contests of generosity. In a contest for votes, he has obtained it.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. But I will not prolong this controversy further. I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio will be agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. I think the Senator from Ohio is right in offering his amendment, and I think his reasoning in support of it has not been controverted by the Senator from North Carolina. The system of extra compensation was considered a very trivial matter at its inception, but like every other iniquitous system it has grown, and though the Senator from North Carolina claims that it is expiring, it has certainly been longer dying than any other measure which I have ever seen before this body. I have studiously resisted the payment at every session since I have been a member of the body. The system commenced in the first place by giving to the clerks $100 each, I believe, and to the other officers of the body $50. It has grown to such an enormous extent that we now appropriate over $30,000 per annum for the object. At the first session of the last Congress we appropriated, as has been said by the Senator from Pennsylvania, over $28,000; the last session the amount was over $30,000. Yes, sir, to an officer of this body whose salary is $3,000 we add $500 extra; to an officer whose salary is $1,800 we add $250 extra; to an officer—the Sergeant-at-Arms—whose salary is $1,500 we add $500 extra, to clerks whose salaries are $1,500 we add $250, to employees who draw from three to four dollars per day we add $250, at a short as well as a long session; swelling the appropriation to the enormous sum of over $30,000.

Whenever it has been resisted heretofore, we have been met by just such an argument as that used by the Senator from North Carolina to-day, that the employees expected it; that they had lived with reference to it; that it would interfere greatly with their private engagements if they did not get it, and therefore we were bound to vote for it. We voted it at the last session, and we are asked this morning to add three to the list. I thought we had gone far enough when, at the close of the last session, we added the gate-keeper; yes, sir, the gate-keeper in the public grounds, remote from the Capitol. I did not object to that, believing that an objection would be useless, as I uniformly failed in objecting to the system. But we have come to a point now when the system can be checked. We can, by the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, give notice to our employees—worthy persons all of them, qualified for their places, I admit; I mean nothing against any of them when I say, that if they are not satisfied with their regular salaries, there are plenty of persons throughout this Confederacy, who would be glad to take their places. If we give the notice, it will be no argument hereafter, in support of the extra compensation that our officers have been living with reference to it. I hope that the vote on the amendment will be regarded as a test vote as to whether we intend to continue the system or stop it, and with that view, I ask for the yeas and nays on it, so that the notice may appear on the record.

Mr. BAYARD. In the special session of 1851, when I first took a seat in this body, I recollect that a resolution was offered to supply an omission which had occurred in not passing the customary resolution at the preceding session in reference to the extra compensation. At that time I was very much struck with the force of the argument used by the Senator from Indiana in opposition to the allowance. Independent of that argument, I could never have consented to the introduction of such a system. But what weighed with me in reply to that argument, was the language of a distinguished Senator using the very style of argument alluded to by the Senator from Illinois. It induced me to vote in favor of the resolution, with the determination in my mind that at no subsequent session would I give such a vote. I will read the remarks made by the Senator from North Carolina in reference to the argument of the Senator from Indiana, in order to show the necessity of the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Ohio. Unless we adopt that amendment, we shall have the same appeal made at another session which was made then. The Senator from North Carolina said:

"I think the honorable Senator from Indiana is entitled to all praise and commendation for the sentiments expressed on this subject, taking the open, public, and manly ground which he has taken in respect to it. I am glad to hear him say that he intends at the next session of Congress to propose a bill for the purpose of the reorganization of the system. I assure him that I for one will, to the utmost of my power, cheerfully cooperate with him in establishing such a system as shall make it unnecessary for the Senate to vote any extra compensation. But no question as to what we shall do at the next session is now before us. The question now is, whether we shall make the usual extra allowance to our officers, or suddenly, without notice, without preconcert or any new arrangement, cut them off, and leave them without that which, from our past conduct, they had a just and fair right to expect?"

It was the force and strength of that argument, applying to the precedents and usages of the Senate, and the impropriety, without notice, of depriving the officers of the compensation to which from our previous action they might look, which induced me at that session to vote for the compensation. The same argument will be made hereafter, unless the amendment of the Senator from Ohio prevails. If it does prevail, no officer can reasonably expect that the extra allowance will be made. Being myself entirely opposed to the system, on the ground that it must inevitably lead to gross corruption and abuse, and might be extended to all the officers of the Government with as much reason as to the officers of the Senate, although it would require in one case, the action of both Houses, and in the other only the action of the Senate, I will vote against the resolution, unless the proviso is adopted.

Mr. BADGER. The introductory remark in what the Senator from Delaware has done me the honor to read, should be expounded by a certain figure in rhetoric by which that is intended which is not expressed, in order to show the meaning which I had in view in what I said at that time. But so far I was entirely in earnest in that case. Though believing in the propriety of the original system, yet it is the subject of so much unnecessary difficulty in the Chamber and so much misconception, that I am ready to yield and vote for the system which may be matured to render it unnecessary.

Mr. BAYARD. I read those remarks merely for the purpose of showing that the same argument might be made at a future session, if we do not give the notice now. It was an argument that weighed with me, coming with the force with which it was stated, the first session at which I took a seat in this body. By the adoption of the amendment I think you preclude the possibility of using such an argument at another session.

Mr. BADGER. If the Committee on Retrenchment report a system which will do away with the extra compensation, no one will vote for the allowance; but if it does not, I assure the honorable Senator I will move the usual resolution, and the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. BAYARD. I think not.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. I will merely remark that the object of the amendment to the amendment is to destroy the original amendment, and those who are in favor of the original amendment will vote against the proposition of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. CHASE. As the object of the amendment to the amendment is clearly seen, we might as well take a test vote on it, and I therefore ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 4, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Borland, Cooper, and Morton—4.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Atherton, Bayard, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Butler, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, James, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Mason, Norris, Sebastian, Seward, Smith, Soulé, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, and Weller—30.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurring on the amendment, Mr. BRIGHT called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken resulted—yeas 34, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Atherton, Bayard, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Evans, Everett, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, James, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Mason, Morton, Norris, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Smith, Soulé, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Toucey, and Weller—34.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Borland, and Cooper—3.

So it was agreed to; and the question recurring on the resolution as amended, it was agreed to.

PRINTING OF A MAP.

Mr. BORLAND. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred the question of printing a map indicating the proposed course of steam navigation between San Francisco and Shanghai, to accompany a bill of the Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN,] for the establishment of a line of mail steamers, have directed me to report in favor of printing the same, and also in favor of printing one thousand extra copies.

Mr. SEWARD. I move to amend the report by striking out "one thousand" and inserting "one thousand five hundred."

The motion was agreed to; and the report of the committee, as amended, was concurred in.

REPORT ON THE MEXICAN BOUNDARY.

Mr. BORLAND. The same committee, to which was referred the report of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating, in further compliance with a resolution of the Senate, certain papers in relation to the Mexican boundary commission, has directed me to report it back; and as the two thousand additional copies of the first part of the report of Mr. Bartlett, the commissioner to run the boundary line, of which this is the completion, have been ordered to be printed, the committee report in favor of printing two thousand additional copies of the completion of it.

The report was concurred in.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion by Mr. MALLORY, it was Ordered, That the heirs of Joseph H. Waring be permitted to withdraw their papers from the files of the Senate.

REPORT OF TOPOGRAPHICAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HAMLIN. On the 19th of April, 1852, there was transmitted to the Senate a report of the Topographical Department, relating to the beacons and light-houses on the new south shoals of Nantucket. Owing to the state of the public printing it was not ordered to be printed. I move that it be printed for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON FRAUDS.

On motion by Mr. HOUSTON, it was Ordered, That fourteen hundred additional copies of the report made yesterday by the Committee on Frauds, &c., be printed for the use of the Senate.

LATE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS.

On motion by Mr. SHIELDS, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by him on Thursday last:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate pay to Robert Beale, late Sergeant-at Arms, the salary for the residue of the present year."

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. President, I cannot well imagine how a Senator who has just voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio to another resolution, can propose such a resolution as this. What do you propose to do, sir? You are here undertaking not to pay an officer, or one who is to render service of any kind to the Senate, but to pay a person whom you have discharged from service. There can be no color of any claim for this compensation. You might as well establish a rule that after you had discharged all your officers you would continue to pay them. I would like to know if there is any reason for it. You can hold your officers as long as you please, and pay them; but after they are discharged, I cannot see why you should pay them.

Mr. SHIELDS. As the Senator from Indiana has charged me with inconsistency, I must say to him that I am not inconsistent in offering this resolution, although I did vote for the proviso of the Senator from Ohio. His proviso was against giving extra pay to officers of the Senate. Everybody knows that Mr. Beale is not an officer of the Senate, so that there is no inconsistency.

Mr. MASON. It is manifest that this resolution will lead to debate, and I therefore move to lay it on the table for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of Executive business.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 17, noes 16.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened,

And the Senate adjourned.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution submitted by Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, on the 21st instant:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be, and they are hereby, authorized to delegate one of their number to proceed, during the ensuing recess of Congress, to take testimony in the matter now on reference to said committee, touching certain frauds alleged to have been committed by Alexander Ramsay and others, in making payment of moneys to certain bands of the Sioux Indians; and that the member of said committee so to be delegated have power to proceed to such points as may be necessary, and to send for persons and papers, and swear witnesses, and take their testimony, and certify the same with other proofs to said committee for their report thereon at the next session of Congress.

Mr. HUNTER. I think that that is a very objectionable resolution. I think it a very bad practice to have committees of the Senate sitting in the recess. I believe that is not a fair and proper mode of investigating any question; still worse would it be for a committee to delegate its power to one single individual. It is a power which ought not to be exercised by any single member of Congress. It seems to me that the inquiry proposed by the resolution belongs to the Executive. We shall soon have a new Governor of the Territory, I presume, who will be ex officio Superintendent of Indian Affairs, and to him or to some special commissioner to be appointed by the Executive, would most properly be delegated such a duty as this. Are we to send our members, or the members of the House of Representatives, about the country as commissioners to take testimony? Surely there could be no practice more dangerous. I hope the Senate will not agree to it.

Mr. WALKER. I am aware that the opposition to, or the advocacy of, any matter which may be proposed in the Senate by the Senator from Virginia, comes with a great deal more force than anything which I, and perhaps the Committee on Indian Affairs, can say; but that there is anything so peculiar in this matter I am not able to perceive. The subject has been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. They have proceeded to a considerable extent in taking testimony. They find in that investigation that, with the witnesses which they have examined here, they can proceed but a short way in the inquiry. They have proceeded far enough, however, to see that this is an important matter, and that it ought to be investigated, and that the Senate ought to be fully informed about it. It is a matter which has been brought before the Senate upon memorial—upon formal charges which I hold in my hand.

Mr. SEWARD. Who are they made by?

Mr. WALKER. By persons residing in Minnesota. One of them is a Mr. Robinson, and another is a Mr. Sweetser. There are various depositions which the committee think it important to make.

Mr. SEWARD. The Senator will excuse me for asking him to state the substance of the charges.

Mr. WALKER. An appropriation of $590,000 was made for the Sioux Indians. The substance of the charges is, that Governor Ramsay, who was the custodier of the money, got the currency of the United States exchanged for the paper of certain banks of the State of New York, upon which he made a large percentage; that he took the money to Minnesota; that he there employed a third person as agent to make the payment; that in making that payment the agent of the Government imposed upon the Indians the necessity of allowing a large percentage, alleged to be fifteen per cent., upon the money paid, before it could pass into the hands of the Indians; that the money that was set apart to be paid to the half-breed Indians was arbitrarily paid, and only to a certain portion, and withheld from the rest. The committee have proceeded, to a certain extent, to investigate the charges. They have arrived at a point which would show that there is a great deal of importance in it; but they can proceed no further for the reason that some members of the Legislature of Minnesota, which has lately been in session, and persons who reside there as missionaries and as citizens have not been here, and could not be got here in time to give us their evidence; but they can be sworn there, and their testimony taken.

I am aware, as I commenced by saying, that the Senator from Virginia occupies an important position here. He is chairman of the Committee on Finance, which connects itself peculiarly with the Executive Department; and Virginia also has the head of another committee which connects itself still more with that Department; but the Senator has no Indians in his State, and he has no occasion to hear their clamorings, as I have. He does not know how the matter affects the local community. He can ill appreciate that there are thousands of Indians on the frontier of Minnesota, and among the pioneer settlements there, ready to do violence to protect their rights unless they see the Government moving with some prospect, and some hope to them, that they are to have their matters investigated. Is there any peculiarity in confiding to an individual the power of a dedimus protestatem to take testimony? Has not the gentleman, in courts of justice, frequently sued out these powers, and sent them to single individuals who could swear witnesses and return the testimony certified to the court? That is all that is proposed by the resolution. It is only proposed that a single member of the Committee on Indian Affairs shall be authorized to go on and complete the taking of the testimony during the recess, not to make a report, but to certify that testimony to the committee at the next session, so that they may have it under examination and report it, together with their report, to the Senate. It is alleged in a letter which accompanies the charges that the individual has had to exercise his personal influence to keep the Indians, who have arms in their hands, from doing personal violence to the inhabitants. I hope violence will not result. For one, I am willing to lend myself to the duty of trying, if possible, to prevent it. I cannot see that there is any enormity in the proposition contained in the resolution. If it be that a commissioner is to be sent out, as the Senator proposes, be it so; but my candid opinion is that it will cost vastly more than what the committee propose will cost. A member of the committee can take the testimony and bring it here, and the Committee on Indian Affairs can make their report upon it. I cannot see, situated as we are, that we should not be presumed to feel a deeper interest in the matter than the Senator from Virginia; and I cannot well appreciate, unless the design of his opposition is personal, why it is thrown with so much strenuousness and violence against the matter. I am one of those who have lived long, for the period of my life, upon the frontiers. I have been much in contact with the Indians. I know a great deal of their character. I know the necessity of keeping something in motion to satisfy them that the Government intends to give a respectful consideration to their rights, and that is all that is proposed here.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I have heard a great deal about these charges against Governor Ramsay, and I think it very proper that I should say a word or two with regard to him.

Mr. WALKER. Will the Senator allow me to say that in what I have said I did not intend to intimate anything against Governor Ramsay. I have only stated that charges have been made, and intimated the importance of having them inquired into, by taking testimony.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I have heard of these charges, and it is proper that I should say that I have had an acquaintance of several years with Governor Ramsay. I have served with him for four years in the House of Representatives. I also served in the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania while he was a clerk of the House. I think therefore that it is due from me to say, that while I served with him he maintained a good character for integrity. I say nothing about his political views, for I differed with him on that subject. I think it is proper that these charges should be investigated. It is due to Governor Ramsay, and I confess I cannot see any more proper mode of making the investigation than that proposed by the Committee on Indian Affairs. I think it would be quite as economical as any mode that can be pursued. I think the investigation is important, and I do not think it would be objected to by those making the charges, or by those against whom they are made I understand that both sides are demanding an investigation, though I do not know what tribunal either party desires. I have had no communication either with the persons making the charges or the accused.

I can add, further, that I did not vote for the treaties under which the payments were made; it is unnecessary for me to state the reasons. But I think it highly proper that the charges should be investigated. I am willing to leave the matter in the hands of any member of the Committee on Indian Affairs; and I hope the facts may be brought out, and the guilty persons punished, whoever they may be. Besides, this is a matter which is pending before this body. We must either dismiss it altogether, or proceed with the investigation. We cannot proceed, in my opinion, in any better mode than that proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SEWARD. I know Governor Ramsay somewhat well. I cannot believe that the charges made against him are true. If I knew him less perfectly than I do, I should still hold myself bound to disbelieve them, until they were proved. But I quite concur with the suggestions of the two Senators who have last spoken. After the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin, I do not know how the Senate can go by giving the committee power to send one of their number during the recess for the object proposed. The Senate is a part of the treaty-making power, together with the Executive, and has to take a part of the responsibility with regard to the care and guardianship over the Indian tribes. If these charges are all false, it is yet established in our history that there have been frauds practiced by Government agents upon the Indians, not surpassed in magnitude and in turpitude by these which are alleged in this case. I remember a treaty which was made with the Seneca Indians for the surrender of their reservation in the State of New York, which agitated the State and the nation for many years, and which was frequently under discussion in the Senate, for the purpose of deciding whether the treaty should not be abrogated on account of the frauds committed under it. It is due to the agents of the Government on all occasions, that when any responsible party shall submit charges against them, they shall have a full investigation. And it is not only necessary that they should have a full investigation, but a prompt one; for if not done promptly it will not be fully done.

If we suspend this investigation till the lapse of the recess of Congress, it is easy to see that it will go over altogether. The delay will amount to a postponement of the investigation of the charges until the subject becomes stale and obsolete. If it is done, and done promptly, there is no other way to do it but through the agency of this committee, and I do not see how the committee could exercise more discretion, more prudence, and more regard to economy than in the manner proposed by them. I trust one of their number will be sent to take the testimony upon which their report must be made at the next session of Congress. If it were any other case, I would not be so strenuous; but where the Indians are concerned, and where their abstract rights are involved, the case is a strong one. And it is much more so, because on the reputation of our good faith among the Indian tribes, we depend for peace and tranquillity upon our border settlements. I shall therefore very cheerfully vote for the resolution.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senators are arguing as if I objected to an investigation. The fact is quite the contrary. I believe that an investigation ought to be made, and that one will be made whether we pass the resolution or not. It is to the mode of investigation which is proposed in the resolution that I object. I think it is a matter for Executive inquiry, and not for a single Senator to conduct during the recess of the Senate. Nor do I know why it is that the Senator from Wisconsin should suppose that I have any personal reason for objecting to it. I have advanced none but public considerations, and public considerations, it seems to me, of weight. Sir, in what capacity is this single Senator to act in the recess when we have all gone away? Is he a Senator still in session during the recess, clothed with legislative powers? How is he to be paid? Who is to decide what he is to take? Is he to have per diem and mileage, no matter where he may go making the investigation? See the difficulties into which we shall be led if this practice be established.

But, again, this method of taking testimony in regard to a disputed question, whether it be conducted by a single individual or by a committee of the Senate sitting in the recess of Congress, it seems to me is not the fairest mode of proceeding. It is an immense power to be lodged in the hands of a committee, and still more in the hands of a single individual. When the committees of the Senate, or of the other House, sit making an investigation while we are in session, they sit in some measure under the correction of the House. If the investigation takes an improper direction, and the persons who are sworn to give evidence before them complain, there are means before the House of inquiring into their conduct, or giving some direction to it under the direction of the House itself; but when it is done by committees without any responsibility to the House, they have the whole power in their own hands, and it is an improper power. It seems to me that when we leave this place our legislative powers are gone, and that if inquiries are to be made, if commissioners are to be appointed to take testimony, they ought to be appointed by the Executive; and more especially does it seem to be proper in this case to leave it to the Governor of the Territory, who will be ex officio Superintendent of Indian Affairs. I have no personal objection to the appointment of any Senator who might be selected by the Committee on Indian Affairs; nor do I object to an investigation. I think there ought to be an examination; but I believe that we shall as certainly have one without the resolution as with it; and if we do not pass it, we shall have one appointed from the proper quarter—the Executive. I oppose the resolution because I regard it as a dangerous precedent. I see the practice to which it may lead hereafter in the appointing not merely of committees to sit during the recess, but of single Senators to act as commissioners to take testimony upon public matters in important cases.

Mr. WALKER. I cannot appreciate the force of what the Senator from Virginia says. The charges have been made to the Senate of the United States. You have imposed the duty on your committee of proceeding in the investigation of them. They have reached a point from which it would be unsatisfactory to both sides to decide upon them; for nobody is making the demand more strenuously for an examination than Governor Ramsay. He demands it. He says that he is innocent in the matter. We know nothing to the contrary. On the other side it is alleged that he is guilty. We have proceeded, as I before remarked, to a certain point in the investigation, and we cannot go further without the passage of the resolution. It is not that we are disposed to take any of the duties of the Executive on our hands, but it is that the committee may be enabled to discharge their duty to the Senate and to the parties, both of which are demanding that an investigation may be had. I would prefer that the committee should be continued to make the investigation, but I know what objections have been raised here to such propositions, on the score of expense. It was therefore thought by the committee best to ask the Senate to permit them to delegate one of their members, not to report on the subject, not to investigate it, but to go as it were and discharge the mechanical duty of taking down the words of the witnesses from their own lips, and then certify that the testimony taken down was properly taken.

Mr. HUNTER. Who will ask the questions? Who will conduct the examination? The commissioner?

Mr. WALKER. I suppose there will be written interrogatories in regard to the charges under consideration.

Mr. HUNTER. Is that a mechanical duty?

Mr. WALKER. Clearly. There will be interrogatories written by the man who will perform the manual duty, and the answers will be returned to the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. Does the Senator mean that there are certain written interrogatories prepared by the committee?

Mr. WALKER. There have not been any directed.

Mr. HUNTER. Then the commissioner is to ask what questions he chooses.

Mr. WALKER. Suppose that is the case; I suppose if a man goes under the direction of the committee, he will go with honest intentions to get the facts of the matter, and if it is not so presumed let the Senate vote the resolution down, and say it will not trust one of its members. I presume that whoever is sent, will go with honest intentions to get the facts on both sides. If it becomes necessary for him to put questions to elicit the facts upon the charges, he is to do so; but it will not be competent for him to condemn or acquit anybody; he is only to report to the committee for its action, and by them report to the Senate, for the Senate's action in its legislative capacity. That is what is meant; and if the Senate is disposed to stigmatize the members of the Indian Committee as being incompetent to do what is often done by commissioners under a dedimus protestatum, let it say so.

Mr. HUNTER. Does the Senator charge me with stigmatizing the Committee on Indian Affairs in that manner? I do not object to that committee particularly; I object to such a power being given to any committee or individual.

Mr. WALKER. I make no charges. I speak warmly, but it is my nature—I cannot help it. I do not wish to be unkind. I wish every Senator of whom I speak, so to understand it, for sometimes when I am actuated by the kindest feelings, I may appear to speak too warmly, and even angrily. I do not mean to be understood as implying any unkind feeling to the Senator.

But upon the score of expense, it would be greater to send the entire committee to attend to the duty, although I would much prefer it. If it is desirable that two, three, four, or the whole committee be authorized to conduct the investigation, let it be so. But the committee, on considerations of economy, thought it would meet the views of the Senate more to ask that one of its members, as a kind of commissioner, should be delegated to take the testimony, to have it ready at the next session, so as not to draw the members of the Legislature of Minnesota or the Governor of Minnesota here; not to bring them from the extreme point of Minnesota to the seat of Government, but that they may give their testimony in Minnesota, where one individual can collect them, while they could not perhaps be collected here. All that is asked is, that their testimony may be taken in writing, to be brought here for the action of the Senate.

Mr. MALLORY. I would suggest whether if we confer the power upon a single member of the body to act as commissioner, he obtains any peculiar authority under it to compel witnesses to attend and give their testimony, and whether false swearing under such authority would be punishable as perjury or not? It is doubtful in my mind whether persons could be punished for false swearing under such circumstances. I question further whether it would not be eminently proper for us, if we confer the power on a single member to act in this manner, after the adjournment of Congress, to prescribe the mode of taking the testimony; how the oaths are to be administered; what form should be used; and whether parties interested should be competent witnesses or not; for in some States they are competent, and in others they are incompetent. It appears to me that the mere conferring of the power nakedly, in the way proposed, is not proper.

Mr. SEWARD. It seems to me, sir, that if we cannot trust a committee of this Senate with discretion to take testimony upon a question before them, we had better disband our committees and discharge them from service. If the Committee on Indian Affairs are incompetent to ascertain the rules and the practice of courts and of parliamentary bodies, in the investigation of cases, then they are fit for nothing; and we are quite as unfit as they, because we have called them to discharge this trust.

Mr. MALLORY. I would like to ask the Senator one question, and that is, as I suggested before, whether false swearing, in giving testimony before the individual who should be sent as a member of the committee, would be perjury or not? It is a question not as to whether the committee would be competent to take testimony; that is conceded; but whether you could punish an individual for false swearing in such a case.

Mr. SEWARD. I will answer the learned gentleman that I suppose perjury, under the laws of the United States, committed before any person authorized by the Senate of the United States to take testimony under oath, would be punishable. There is an act of Congress, as I understand, to that effect. It does not alter the case at all, whether there be one or several persons empowered to take testimony. The Senate may delegate this power to one as well as to three or five. Then we come back to the question suggested by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] whether it is wiser and whether it is better and safer to refer, or leave this subject to the Executive, than to exercise the power ourselves. From the history of free institutions, from the history of Parliaments in England down to this day, we know that the duty of legislative inquiry into abuses in the Executive Department of the Government, has been one of the highest trusts reposed in the Legislature. It is the theory of the English Government; it is the theory of our Government.

Mr. HUNTER. I would ask the Senator if I have objected to legislative inquiry, or whether the objection has not been to continue using the power of the committee during the recess? I have admitted the propriety of legislative inquiry by the Senate.

Mr. SEWARD. I understood the Senator to say that he wished the resolution might not pass, because he anticipated an inquiry by the more appropriate authority, and that was the Executive.

Mr. HUNTER. More proper during the recess.

Mr. SEWARD. One word on that point. We have commenced the investigation; we have assumed the responsibility. It is legitimate. We have arrived at the adjournment, and we are unable, by reason of that adjournment, to prosecute the investigation to a close. Shall we suspend it for the purpose of resuming it again at the next session of Congress? No, because there will have been a delay which will be injurious. Then must we suspend, and trust that the Executive will take up and complete the investigation which we have commenced? But the Executive has no responsibility upon the subject; he has assumed none. I do not know that the subject has been brought before him. We could not calculate that the Executive would assume the responsibility unless we request him to do it. Now, if I were to choose the functionary to whom to delegate the power, and who would prosecute this subject with the greatest care and with the highest sense of responsibility, I should prefer the Committee on Indian Affairs to the Executive. It is true there might be abuses by the committee, and so there might be by the Executive. The person whom we delegate will be responsible to us at the next session, and he will be responsible to the public. What he does could not be done in secret. The very fact that he should attempt to do it in secret would be an impeachment of himself, which would forfeit his claim to the confidence of the people in the report which must come from him. He must act openly, for there will be witnesses, and if they have good ground to complain of his management of the subject, they will come here and complain. It seems to me we are throwing unnecessary difficulties in the way of this resolution, the only effect of which difficulties will be to delay the investigation of the case, which a regard for justice requires should be made soon.

Mr. BUTLER. There has been one question suggested in this discussion upon which I wish to say a word. What is perjury? What does it depend upon? Strictly, there is no such thing as knowing what perjury is by the laws of the United States, except by positive enactment. There are a good many acts upon the subject to say what is or what is not perjury. I know by express statute a committee of Congress has the right to administer an oath, but it is as a committee, in virtute officii; but when the committee is disorganized and a single member is delegated with the power, I do not believe there is any such thing in the law. I do not believe it is the contemplation of the statute, that the power can be conferred on a single person by the committee. I have no doubt that the honorable Senator from Wisconsin would perform the duty proposed by the resolution in good faith and with impartiality, but we know, Mr. President, how jealous parties are of having testimony taken with the right of examination and cross-examination. We know it is very much insisted upon by all parties; and we should guard this right of investigation by all the ordinary rules which have heretofore been observed. I say, with the honorable Senator from Virginia, that it is a very dangerous precedent to have this continuing power of the committees in the recess of the Senate. I objected very much to other committees being appointed, for the Senate sits long enough without them. I expect we will be in session all the year after awhile. I suppose this investigation will go on. If it is to go on perhaps it ought to be under the Executive authority. I do not know whether it could prosecute such a commission as you would impose the duty upon. I am not prepared to say, but I am perfectly certain that there is no such thing in the contemplation of the statute as a committee disorganizing itself and making one of its members do the business.

Mr. COOPER. I have not looked to-day at the statute, but I remember very well, in the other House, on one occasion, that I did look at the law on the subject, and I satisfied myself that under the authority given to a committee to investigate and send for persons and papers and take testimony, that a right to appoint a commissioner to take the testimony is given. In the case to which I allude, a commissioner was appointed three several times. The late Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BELL] was chairman of the committee at first. He issued a commission to a person in Nacogdoches, Louisiana, to take testimony. Mr. Adams was afterwards chairman. He continued the commission. At a subsequent period, I became chairman and issued a commission under the authority of that statute. This is my recollection of the statute, and I have no doubt that under it the committee will have the power to appoint a person to take the testimony.

Mr. CHASE. I have no doubt that a committee during the sitting of the Senate can authorize its members to take testimony; but the difficulty which strikes my mind is this: The Committee on Indian Affairs is a committee for this special session. It can exist only during this session. After the adjournment of the Senate, there can be no Committee on Indian Affairs. If it cannot act itself beyond the session, it can communicate no power to anybody else to act. It seems to me that view of the subject is conclusive.

In regard to this general system, if the Senate is indisposed to go into this business of examinations through the medium of its own members sitting during the recess, now is the very time to indicate its determination to discontinue that practice. The Committee on Indian Affairs is constituted of some of the ablest and most distinguished members of the Senate; it is a committee in which the Senate reposes entire confidence, and everything they may do either in conducting the examination or delegating it would meet the entire confidence of the Senate. There can be no ground for the slightest distrust of the committee. If, then, we have a committee so intelligent, so deserving of confidence as that, it is with that very committee we should begin, for there can be no suspicion whatever of any motive of distrust.

Now, sir, is the practice itself right? The President of the United States is charged with the executive conduct of our public affairs under the law, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate he appoints the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. That is a bureau by itself in this Government. That bureau and the President himself will undoubtedly find their attention attracted by the subject which has engaged the attention of the Committee on Indian Affairs. The law has confided this whole subject to the President and to the bureau. Shall we withdraw it from their hands? Is it wise to divide the responsibility of the Executive department of the Government? It is true, as it is said, that the Senate advises the President. That is undoubtedly correct; but we advise the President upon matters submitted to the Senate. We do not volunteer advice to the President; much less ought we, it seems to me, to originate and conduct an investigation by ourselves, or when the Senate is not in session, which belongs especially to the Executive department of the Government. Our committees look to the Executive department of the Government for advice and instruction. There are the sources of evidence in a great measure. There the evidence may be collected from the testimony of witnesses before them. It seems to me it would be indiscreet, to say the least of it, to assume through the Senate any part of the duties which belong to the Executive. I should greatly prefer to leave the whole subject with the President and his Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and I feel confident that they will give to all parties a fair and thorough investigation, and that at the next session, if we desire information, we can obtain it in the ordinary way from the Department.

Mr. WALKER. I wish to say a word or two with reference to the point raised by the Senator from South Carolina with regard to the examination and cross-examination of witnesses, and to state that the committee on Indian Affairs have taken that very course. They have presented interrogatories, and have had a cross-examination of witnesses in order that the facts might be elicited.

In reference to what was said by the Senator from Ohio, if I understand the organization of the committees of the Senate, which is a perpetual body, they hold their appointment until they are superseded. Certainly we shall proceed at the next session to appoint new committees; and if not then, those now appointed will continue. Such has always been my apprehension of the matter. Some gentlemen say "No."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule is that the committees "shall be appointed at the commencement of each session."

Mr. WALKER. So I understand; and a committee appointed at this session exists until one is appointed at the next session. And now what is proposed by the resolution is simply to authorize one of our committees to delegate one of its members to proceed, during the time for which it is constituted, to procure testimony for the action of the body at the next session.

Mr. ADAMS. I voted at the last session against the creation of various committees to be authorized to sit during vacation. I then doubted the propriety of such a proceeding, though I have no doubt of the power of the Senate to appoint a committee of its own body to obtain information when a proper case is presented for its consideration. I understand it to be the duty of the President of the United States to see that the laws are faithfully executed, and the duty of the legislative body to see that proper laws are passed; and if this body discovers a deficiency in the information in relation to our legislative duties, and we can obtain that information by a committee of our own body better than in any other way, I have no doubt of the propriety of appointing a committee. Then the whole question, in my mind, in reference to the proposed committee, is as to the importance of the information. Charges have been made against a public officer. He is amenable by impeachment to this body. The House of Representatives has as much interest as the Senate has in relation to the performance of his duties by that officer. The duty is devolved upon the President of the United States to see that the laws are faithfully executed. If there is any action desired to be taken by this body, I have no objection to taking the proper means to obtain information. My principal object in rising is to propose an amendment. If it is desirable—and I know it is desirable to the whole country—that correct information should be had in reference to this alleged fraud, I would suggest that a small difference in the compensation and expenses should not be looked to. Therefore I move to strike out "one" and insert "three," so as to have a committee of three appointed to take the testimony; and then whatever may be the sense of the Senate as to the propriety of appointing a committee, I have no choice in reference to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BADGER in the chair.) The Chair would suggest that the amendment should be put in a different form. The resolution is that the Committee on Indian Affairs delegate one of their number to perform the duty.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to strike all that out, and make it read, that a committee of three be appointed by the Presiding Officer to perform the duty.

Mr. HUNTER. Here are two laws in relation to the power of committees to administer oaths. They have been handed to me, and I desire to refer to them. The first is the law of May 3, 1798, which provides "that the President of the Senate, 'the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the 'chairman of the Committee of the Whole, or the 'chairman of a Select Committee of either House 'shall be empowered to administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses in any case under their 'examination." The next is an act to extend the provisions of that act. It provides "that the 'chairman of any standing committee, either of 'the House of Representatives or of the Senate 'of the United States, shall be empowered to administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses in any 'case under their examination, and any person 'who shall be guilty of perjury before such committee, shall be liable to the pains and penalties 'prescribed for the punishment of the crime of 'willful and corrupt perjury." So that the power is expressly confined to the Presiding Officers of the two Houses, and the chairmen of committees.

Mr. TOUCEY. I am not satisfied to vote for this delegation of power by a committee. I am not satisfied that the delegate of the committee would have any power whatever to compel the attendance of witnesses. I am not satisfied that if the oath was administered and violated, that the party could be indicted for perjury. And if a witness were to refuse to answer an inquiry of the delegate, I do not think there would be any power to commit him for his refusal to answer. If, therefore, I were in favor of committees sitting during the recess of Congress, I should still be opposed, for the reason that I have suggested, to a committee organized in this manner.

But, sir, it is made the duty of the President of the United States to see that the laws are faithfully executed, and treaties are the supreme laws of the land. It is therefore his duty, under the Constitution, to make the inquiry, and there is a bureau of the Executive department, to which that inquiry properly belongs. I am not satisfied either that there would be any evil arising from the delay. We shall not be here until the next session of Congress to take advantage of any information which the committee may obtain. The next session will be the long one, and if this is an investigation which ought to go on, and if the Executive departments shall neglect to make the investigation, we shall then have the power in season for any action to make the inquiries, before we, in this body, or the members of the other House, could act upon any information which might be obtained by this mode of investigation which is proposed. I hope, therefore, the whole inquiry will be suspended until we meet again.

Mr. PETTIT. It seems to me that it is due alike to the Senate and to the accused, Governor Ramsay, that this investigation should go on at the earliest day. It is all true that it may go on at the next session, which will be the long session; but there will be nothing done during the first months in the winter, and laboring in the summer will be rather an unpleasant and wearisome undertaking, besides the difficulty of dragging witnesses from Minnesota here to give their testimony, when two or three men might be sent there for the purpose of taking the testimony. If Governor Ramsay is innocent, as I trust it may turn out he is—and I do not pretend to speak on that point at all—as an honorable man I ask for him that the Senate shall take the most prompt and efficient means for having the charges investigated. If he be innocent, and has been falsely charged, why continue to have him held up to the gaze of the world for a year as a villain and that of the worst kind? He is demanding the investigation. It is due to him that he should have it at our hands. Sir, there can be no difficulty in detailing one member of that committee or the whole of them for the investigation.

Mr. CHASE. The Senator from Indiana has said that Governor Ramsay has demanded an investigation. Has he addressed any communication to that effect?

Mr. PETTIT. He has not addressed any communication to me.

Mr. CHASE. Has he addressed any communication to the Senate?

Mr. PETTIT. I have not seen any. I took the word of the Senator for the statement. It seems to me that we ought to have the investigation so as to settle the question whether he is guilty or not. If he is innocent he ought to have it on his own account; and we ought to have it if he is guilty.

I know Governor Ramsay well. I formerly served with him in the other House. Whether he be guilty or not I am not prepared to say, having had no connection with this matter; but while serving with him in the other House I regarded him as an honorable man. I hope and trust it may turn out that he has remained so. But if he be an honorable man, he asks this examination, and it is due from the Senate, or any public body having the power, to make the examination promptly and speedily, that it shall be made. Why hold him up, I say, a long year, and more than a year, to public scorn, ridicule, and the denunciations of the papers all over the country, when we have the power to prepare the way for his punishment or relieve him from suspicion?

To obviate the difficulty suggested by the Senator from Virginia, who believes that there is some doubt about the authority of the delegate of a committee to administer oaths, or the punishment which would follow in the event of a violation of the oaths, I will move to amend the resolution so as to make it read that a committee of three shall be appointed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment is already pending for that purpose, offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. PETTIT. I was not aware of that. I will say one word in reference to it. If the Senate appoint such a committee, there can be no doubt of the authority of that committee to administer the oaths, to progress with the investigation, to do justice to the party accused, and to do justice to the country. It is idle to talk about the miserable paltry sum which it will cost. Suppose you should pay the per diem and mileage of three members of Congress; suppose you should pay the mileage to Minnesota or elsewhere in the country, wherever it shall be necessary, and the regular per diem during this vacation, what great sum would it be at last? Sir, is it to be weighed in the balance at all with the administration of public justice, with the investigation of charges of large peculation and wrong? Is it to weigh for a moment in the balance against the character of an honorable man, which is put in jeopardy in this manner? It ought not for one moment. I hope, to put the question beyond any doubt as to the authority to administer the oaths, and their binding effect, that a committee of three will be raised. I believe it will be better to intrust the power to such a committee than to one person. It is a large power to delegate to one man, I grant. Let there then be a committee of three appointed. I insist, at any rate, that the investigation shall go on. The honorable Senator from Wisconsin having been the mover of the resolution, would, in all probability, if the resolution as he introduced it should pass, be detailed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to make the investigation; and I take great pleasure in saying, that having known that gentleman since our early youth, having long since formed an acquaintance, I might well say from boyhood, I take pleasure in saying that I do not believe such a duty could be confided to more faithful, efficient, or honest hands. I trust, however, the resolution will be so amended as to appoint a committee of three, in order that there may be no doubt about the power.

Mr. BUTLER. If we are to go on with the investigation proposed by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, and which seems to be insisted upon by the Senator from Indiana, it does seem to me that three Senators are the very last persons who ought to be employed to make it, because Governor Ramsay—about whom I know nothing—is amenable to the Federal Government for his acts, and he must be amenable through the ordinary mode in which all public functionaries are amenable, that is by impeachment from the House of Representatives. And, sir, in that point of view we are the judges; and are the judges of the accused to send out their own committee to collect testimony? That would be, in a fair contemplation of our duties, a paradox. I do not know what use we could make of the information if we had it. Could we impeach the accused? All we could do would be to acquit him. If it became necessary for us to decide upon his guilt, this would be an improper mode of proceeding. I make this suggestion, therefore, that if any information is to be acquired, it ought not to be acquired through a committee of Senators. It ought to be acquired through a committee of strangers; and even if the House of Representatives sent its own committee, it ought to send it as a prosecuting committee with a view to an impeachment. I shall decidedly oppose the raising of the committee of three Senators.

Mr. MASON. I move that the further consideration of the subject be postponed until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

Mr. BORLAND moved that the Senate adjourn; which was not agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. SEWARD moved that when the Senate adjourn, it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope, Mr. President, that that will not be done. I am satisfied that the effect of that would be, that when we assemble on Monday there will not be a quorum here. I shall have to ask the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will merely suggest, before the question is put, that if we adjourn over until Monday, and then find ourselves here without a quorum, we can then only adjourn from day to day, and shall consequently have to sit the remainder of the year.

Mr. MASON. If the business before the Senate is to be acted on, it is necessary that we should remain here until it is finished. We have now but a bare quorum, and many gentlemen have told me that they are obliged to leave the city. I am not one of those who will leave. Although it is a very great inconvenience to me to remain here, I submit to it, and I intend to sit here from day to day until we finish the public business.

Mr. PHELPS. Permit me to say, Mr. President, that I do not see anything to be gained by adjourning over until Monday. We are certainly not so overburdened with business that we need to sit more than two days, and I think we had better finish it this week. I agree with my friends over the way, that if we adjourn until Monday we shall never get a quorum again.

Mr. CHASE. I will remark that to-morrow is Good Friday, and I think respect enough is due to the wishes of those Senators who desire to keep that day to induce the Senate to adjourn over. I will therefore suggest to my friend from New York to agree to a compromise, and modify his motion so as to adjourn over until Saturday instead of Monday.

Mr. BADGER. It seems that we have got the Senator from Ohio in favor of a compromise at last. [Laughter.]

Mr. SEWARD. If the honorable Senator from Ohio goes for a compromise, I believe I must give up too. I accept his proposition, and will modify my motion so that when we adjourn it be to meet on Saturday, at twelve o'clock.

Mr. BORLAND. I move that the Senate now adjourn.

The question being then taken, upon a division there were—ayes 10, noes 16; so the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. BORLAND. Although the Senate has refused to adjourn, I think it is pretty clear that we can do no other business; for there is not a quorum present.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope the question will be put on my motion.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not believe that is in order when there is no quorum; but I will ask the yeas and nays upon it, at any rate.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question being then put on the motion that when the Senate adjourn it be to meet on Saturday next, on a division there were—ayes 17, noes 9; no quorum voting.

Mr. BRIGHT then moved that the Senate adjourn; which was not agreed to.

Mr. PETTIT. I move that when the Senate adjourn it be to meet at twelve o'clock on Monday next.

Mr. BORLAND. I will suggest that that motion is not in order unless there is a quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Cooper in the chair.) In the opinion of the Chair the motion is in order.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope my friend from Indiana will not press that motion that we shall adjourn over until Monday; for I think we can employ our time here upon nominations and treaties.

Mr. PETTIT. At the request of my friend from Virginia, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. CHASE. I think we have no such business before us as to require us to sit to-morrow, at any rate. All that remains is nominations, which can be dispatched without delay, when they shall be sent in, judging from the unanimity which has prevailed in the consideration of our business thus far.

Mr. HOUSTON. Some new question may spring up.

Mr. CHASE. If we are determined to go through with our business we can do so. All that is before us could be finished to-day, if necessary. But what would be the necessity for that? We know that there are communications yet to be made by the Executive, which we shall not receive until next week, and which prevent our adjourning. We cannot with propriety adjourn until we receive an intimation from the President that he has no further communications of an Executive character to send to us. Why not, then, adjourn over until Monday? I can see no reason why we should not do so; and I therefore renew the motion that when we adjourn it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. HUNTER. I will say that if we adjourn to-day to meet on Monday next, the result will be that we shall have to sit all next week, and perhaps the week after. It is very doubtful whether we should have a quorum.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I have been here every day from the beginning to the end of our sitting; but while I am willing to come here, I am not willing to be dragged here upon days when I do not feel inclined to come, and when it is very evident there will be no quorum here.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have not the least disposition in the world to embarrass gentlemen who have different views from my own with regard to this matter. I am perfectly willing to sit here until we get through with every particle of the business before us. I am even willing to listen to the debates that may incidentally grow up on various topics; but I will repeat what I said before, that if we adjourn over until Monday, there will not be a quorum in the body for the transaction of business. I do not care about making sixteen dollars and rendering no service for it; I would much rather be on my way home. It seems to me, Mr. President that we are trifling with our duties here, when we are pretending to be in session, and yet adjourn over two or three days at a time. There is nothing in that which I can see that is very beneficial to the country, or creditable to ourselves. I wish to test the sense of the Senate on this subject; and it gives me great pleasure that there is not a quorum present on this occasion, so that no motion can be entertained except a motion to adjourn.

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. President, it is manifest to me that it would expedite business to adjourn over until Saturday. The suggestion is made that we shall have no quorum until some business is transacted at the other end of the avenue. Why have we no quorum? It is because gentlemen feel compelled to go to the other end of the avenue to attend to important business. If the Senate should adjourn over, we can have an opportunity to-morrow to attend to the pressing business which has accumulated upon our hands, and thus we could enable the Executive to prepare business for us to dispose of here on Saturday. I think that for this reason it would really be a saving of time if we should adjourn from now until Saturday at twelve o'clock.

Mr. CHASE. I wish to say, in relation to the remarks which have fallen from the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Houston,] that no one is more ready than I am to sit here and dispatch the business with which we are intrusted. If we could dispose of the whole business of the session so as to adjourn to-morrow, it would afford me very great pleasure. I am exceedingly anxious for adjournment—no one is more so; but gentlemen should remember what is the condition of the public business. We know that the Executive expects during the next week to send in further communications, which will require our action.

Mr. FISH, (in his seat.) How do we know that?

Mr. CHASE. I will inform the gentleman that I have heard it stated by Senators who are presumed to know. I thought it was well known. At all events, Mr. President, this is an Executive session. It is not usual, at sessions of this character, to adjourn until some intimation is received from the Executive that he has no further communication to make. No such intimation is in the possession of any Senator; but, on the contrary, the Executive has intimated his intention of transmitting further communications to us. If, then, there is business which will require us to be here next week, why refuse to adjourn over? Shall we expedite the public business by coming here? I think not. We cannot certainly transact all the public business that is before us in two days; for we have these nominations yet to come. We then accomplish nothing by coming here, in the way of expediting the public business, but we merely embarrass those Senators who have engagements for their constituents at the other end of the avenue, and we shall also embarrass those Senators who, in consequence of the character of the day, may not wish to attend here to-morrow. Under these circumstances, I hope the honorable Senator from Texas will withdraw all opposition to adjourning over. I would go as far as he would to expedite the business of the Senate and to bring about an early adjournment; but I cannot see that our meeting here to-morrow would tend, in the slightest degree, to produce that result. The gentleman says we shall not have a quorum if we adjourn over; but, sir, I cannot believe that any Senator would absent himself, while the public business requires his presence here, without some good reason.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am sorry, Mr. President, that I cannot agree with what my friend has said in relation to the transaction of business at the Departments. If the object is to aid the President in making his nominations, or to aid the Departments, we ought to sit here day and night, so as to give them an opportunity to do something. If the Senate adjourns over they will not be able to do a single thing; and it is in mercy to them that I want to sit. It would be better if we should sit day and night, because that would relieve them in some degree, from importunity, and give them a chance to do something. I want to give them a little rest, so as to enable them to come to some conclusion; but if Senators are bent on this thing—if it is the general wish that the Senate shall be turned loose upon the Departments to-morrow—I do not know as it will avail much for me to oppose it. Perhaps they would better have one day than take to-morrow and Saturday both, and I am somewhat inclined to yield to the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, and consent to the Senate's adjourning over till Saturday; and then, if any gentlemen wish to keep Good Friday, they can have an opportunity. I believe I will not object to that, but I cannot give them more than one day.

Mr. CHASE. I will modify my motion, then, so as to adjourn until Saturday instead of Monday.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I would agree to this arrangement which the Senator proposes, if I were not convinced from our experience yesterday and to-day that we shall not be able to get through the public business unless we sit from day to day. The business which we have before us of an Executive character occupies very little of our time; but it is principally taken up in debating subjects that have run over from the last session; that was the case yesterday, and it has been the case again to-day, and now we are told that we cannot get through until next week. I shall be obliged to resort to all parliamentary means to prevent the motion of the Senator from Ohio from being adopted.

Mr. BUTLER. I will answer for it that we could get through with all the nominations the President would send to us in this week; and we could let the treaties rest until the next session.

Mr. BADGER. I will suggest to the honorable Senator from Virginia [Mr. Mason] that we shall accomplish nothing in the world by meeting to-morrow. No business can be done. I scarcely ever absent myself from my place; but I shall not be here, for one, and he may depend upon it that there will be no quorum.

The question being then taken on the motion of Mr. Chase, on a division there were—ayes 20, noes 7; no quorum voting.

Mr. MASON then moved that the Senate adjourn; which was not agreed to.

Mr. PETTIT. I now renew the motion that when the Senate adjourns it be to meet on Monday next at twelve o'clock.

The question being taken, on a division there were—ayes 19, noes 8; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to ask whether it is according to the rules for a member to vote on both sides of the same question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, sir, that has been done here; but there did not appear to be a quorum after all, so I will let that pass. I will now move that when we adjourn it be to meet on Saturday; and in making that motion I desire to say that there is no probability that we shall finish the business of this session until the middle of next week, or perhaps later than that; but it seems to me that by Thursday or Friday of next week we shall be able to get through with our business. We are called together by the Executive to attend to important public business, and I trust that Senators will not absent themselves so as to leave us without a quorum.

Mr. BADGER, (in his seat.) I am afraid they will.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, sir, I am afraid they will; but at the same time I hope they will not. If we shall be under the necessity of remaining here until the middle of next week, there will be nothing gained by sitting to-morrow, since, for various reasons, some of which have been adverted to, it is obviously the sense of nearly the whole body to adjourn over until Monday. I wish, therefore, to suggest to those Senators who resist this proposition, and who are very desirous of transacting our public business as fast as possible, that it can hardly be expected that we should facilitate the transaction of public business by a policy which leads us to resist the will of nearly the whole body. On this ground I have given way to the extent of allowing them to-morrow, and I hope they will consent to sit on Saturday. I submit that motion, that when we adjourn it be to meet on Saturday.

Mr. PETTIT. I hope we will either adjourn to meet to-morrow or adjourn over until Monday. Let us adjourn over for two days or none.

Mr. MASON. I have resisted until I find it is useless to resist any longer, and although I am still of the opinion that we ought only to adjourn from day to day, I will not resist the will of the Senate to adjourn over until Saturday.

The question being then taken on the motion of Mr. Houston, on a division there were—ayes 21, noes 2; no quorum voting.

Mr. BUTLER. There are some gentlemen who did not vote, and perhaps if they should all vote there would be a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are not enough to make a quorum.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the absentees be sent for. We have been sitting here at work all day, and it is no more than right that those members who are absent should be requested to attend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent members. Are Senators ready for the question on that motion?

Mr. WELLER. I move that the Senate now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PETTIT. I withdrew one motion which I made in order to gratify my colleague and other gentlemen, and I hope he will withdraw that.

Mr. BRIGHT. Certainly; I withdraw it.

Mr. PETTIT. I now move that when the Senate adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. WELLER. I call for a division on that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is perfectly idle to put the question when it is known that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. PETTIT. Perhaps there is a quorum now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator that there is not a quorum; there are but twenty-four Senators in the Chamber.

Mr. PETTIT. There may be others in the ante-rooms.

Mr. BRIGHT. I renew the motion that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent members.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope the motion of my friend from Indiana, that when we adjourn it be to meet on Monday next, will meet the concurrence of the Senate; and I wish to make an appeal to the honorable Senator from California, [Mr. WELLER,] and to other Senators who resist that motion, by stating that, while I am perfectly willing, and am determined to remain here so long as the public business shall require, if it be all next week, to the sacrifice of all engagements elsewhere, and while I am willing to meet to-morrow and next day, if it be necessary, yet it must be apparent that the Executive business for which we are convened is not in such a situation as to require our attendance here on to-morrow and the day after. We shall have time enough after it shall be prepared and brought before us to act upon it; and as we all have some business connected with our official trusts here which we cannot do at our regular sittings, I think some opportunity should be allowed for that, instead of requiring us to be here at a time when we can do nothing. Under these circumstances, I trust the honorable Senator from California will withdraw his opposition, and allow us to adjourn over.

Mr. BUTLER. So far as regards the termination of this session, it depends entirely on the communications from the President; and whether we meet to-morrow, or on Saturday, or not until Monday, makes not the least difference so far as that is concerned. I think if we should adjourn from now until Monday, we should do just as much business; and if we sit every day, we shall do just as little. Why, then, should gentlemen so strenuously adhere to their determination to force us to adjourn from day to day? The session terminates, as a matter of course, the moment the President sends a message here that he has no further communications to make and we confirm all the nominations. It will not close until then; and in the mean time I think it is the duty of gentlemen to attend here in their seats, and not go to the Departments and stay until about four o'clock, and then come here at the time when we want our dinners, and call for a division on questions in order to defeat the will of the majority of the body.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, I take it for granted that the honorable Senator from South Carolina alludes to me in his concluding remark, and I deem it proper to make an explanation. So far from having business at the Departments which detained me from my seat, I had a constituent, a California gentleman, who was fortunate enough to get married to-day, and having selected me to back him upon that occasion, I was constrained to absent myself from my place here. No public business could have induced me to leave the Senate; but when private business, involving a question of such an interesting and delicate nature calls me away, I know that my gallant friend from South Carolina would be the last man to complain of my absence. I will say, furthermore, that whenever he shall be so fortunate as to get a lady in the same condition—I mean in a condition to consent to matrimony—it will afford me great pleasure to back him also. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. I will promise my friend from California the same thing; and I think there is a better prospect of his needing my services in that respect than of my needing his. [Laughter.]

The question was then stated on the motion of Mr. PETTIT, that when the Senate adjourns it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. MASON. The Senate has just made an order to send for absent members. In this state of business, a motion to adjourn is in order, but not a motion to adjourn until a future day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair a motion to adjourn to a future day is in order. The motion was made, and the question has not been put.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Senate can only adjourn from day to day without a quorum; the rule so declares.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the rule very well; but there is no motion to adjourn.

Mr. WELLER. I make that motion now.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. I can only say that there are some very obstinate men here. [Laughter.]

Mr. PETTIT. I move that when the Senate adjourns it be to meet on Monday next.

Several SENATORS. That motion is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COOPER in the chair.) The Chair decides it to be in order.

Mr. MASON. I am very reluctant to differ from the judgment of the Chair in any respect, but I am satisfied that the motion just made is not in order. I shall be compelled to appeal from the decision of the Chair on the question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question. A motion was made by the Senator from Indiana, that when the Senate adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next. The Chair entertained the motion. The Senator from Virginia appeals from the decision of the Chair in entertaining that motion. The question now before the Senate is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?"

Mr. BRIGHT. I will say, with due deference to the opinion of the Chair, that it is manifest to my mind that the Chair is in error. The Chair will see what the effect will be, from the appeal which has been taken by my friend from Virginia. When the question is put, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?" a division will be called, and there is no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That we do not know; that question remains to be decided whether there will be a quorum when the question is put on the appeal.

Mr. BRIGHT. The proper motion, then, with due deference to the decision of the Chair, is to suspend the order requiring absent members to be sent for.

Mr. MASON. When the Senate ascertains officially that there is no quorum present, of course the order continues in force to send for absent members; but as soon as there is a quorum any motion will be in order.

The question was then again stated on the appeal, and Mr. BRIGHT called for a division.

Mr. WELLER. I will propose a compromise. We have no quorum here; that is evident. Some Senators want to adjourn over till Monday, and some want to adjourn only till to-morrow. I therefore propose, as a compromise, that we adjourn over until Saturday.

Mr. BRIGHT. I object to any compromise.

The question being then taken on the appeal, on a division, there were—ayes 15, noes 4; whereupon the Chair announced the decision as sustained, and the question recurred on the motion that when the Senate adjourns it be to meet on Monday.

Mr. HUNTER. It is useless to be consuming our time in this way, when there is not a quorum present, and I therefore move that we adjourn.

Mr. PETTIT called for a division; and the question being taken, there were—ayes 9, noes 12; so the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. STUART. I hope the motion to adjourn over will not be renewed until there is a quorum here. Let us have a quorum first, and then vote afterwards.

Mr. HOUSTON. There is not much prospect of that. Instead of increasing the number of Senators present, the longer we sit the more our numbers are diminishing. We have just got rid of several more, and I think we might as well adjourn and meet to-morrow, unless some gentlemen can give some good reasons for persisting longer in the motion to adjourn over.

Mr. PETTIT. I will gratify the Senator from Texas by giving some reasons. The reason which influences me is this: I am satisfied that we shall do no business to any valuable purpose, either to-morrow or the next day. To-morrow is what is called Good Friday. I never knew a good Friday yet, and I hope that to-morrow will be a good one at any rate. It was always "hangman's day" with me. In addition to that, many Senators have important business to transact at the other end of the avenue, and I hope we shall adjourn over for two days in order to give them a chance to attend to it. I am satisfied that we could not get a quorum if we should undertake to meet to-morrow or on Saturday. These are some of the reasons why I think we should adjourn over until Monday, and I make that motion.

Mr. HOUSTON. The suggestion presented by the remarks of the honorable Senator has some weight. I believe, after all, it will be well enough to turn the whole Senate loose upon the Departments, and then we can all have a fair chance. I think some of our members are rather getting the advantage of us by staying away when we are sitting here; and I will relent, sir, and agree to adjourn over till Monday. [Laughter.]

The question being then taken, Mr. WELLER called for a division; and upon a count, there were—ayes 14, noes 5; no quorum voting.

Mr. HUNTER. We have no means of compelling the attendance of absent members. We tried that during the last legislative session, one night when there was a great necessity for the appearance of a quorum, and at last we were forced to adjourn because we could not compel the attendance of absent members under such rules as we now have. We cannot do it on this occasion, and the motion to adjourn over cannot prevail for want of a quorum. I hope that we will adjourn.

Mr. BADGER. I move that we now adjourn, and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Borland, Bright, Butler, Evans, Everett, Hunter, Mallory, Mason, Phelps, Shields, Smith, Thompson of Kentucky, and Weller—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Bayard, Chase, Cooper, Dodge of Iowa, Fish, Jones of Iowa, Pettit, Seward, Stuart, Sumner, and Toucey—12.

So the motion was agreed to; and, accordingly, The Senate adjourned.

FRIDAY, March 25, 1853.

The PRESIDENT called the Senate to order at a quarter past twelve o'clock.

Mr. ADAMS submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a reading clerk, whose duty it shall be to attend in the Senate and assist the Secretary, and to do such duties when the Senate is not in session as the Secretary may require; and he shall receive per annum out of the contingent fund of the Senate, the same salary as the Chief Clerk of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that there is no quorum present. The rule requires him to wait a reasonable time for the appearance of Senators; and fifteen minutes, in the opinion of the Chair, is a reasonable time.

Mr. SEWARD. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ADAMS. In order that we may have a certain count, I will ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Benjamin, Butler, Cooper, Evans, Hamlin, James, Norris, Pettit, Seward, Smith, Sumner, Toucey, and Wright—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atherton, Dodge of Wisconsin, Everett, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Hunter, Mason, Phelps, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Walker, and Weller—13.

So the motion was agreed to,
And the Senate adjourned.

SATURDAY, March 26, 1853.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, who has been absent a few days in consequence of a domestic affliction, resumed his seat this morning.

NAVAL DEPÔT IN NORTH CAROLINA.

The following resolution, submitted by Mr. BADGER on the 17th instant, was considered and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to inquire whether it will not be advantageous to the Government of the United States to establish a naval depôt at Beaufort in North Carolina, and report to the Senate at the next session."

REPAIRING CAPITOL ROOMS.

The following resolution, submitted by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, on the 7th instant, was considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate pay the amount which may be allowed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, for the expenses incurred during the last session, in repairing and fitting up for use two rooms in the basement of the Capitol.

PURSER WELCH.

Mr. COOPER. In the course of the examination before the committee of which the Senator from Texas [Mr. HOUSTON] was chairman, the committee appointed to investigate certain charges of fraud, there was some testimony given in relation to Purser Welch, by the late Secretary of the Navy. In that testimony, there was a single word which seemed to reflect upon Purser Welch. The committee has closed its labors and made its report; the testimony which I hold in my hand, cannot therefore be made a part of the report of the committee; but, in justice to the individual against whom there seemed to be some implied censure, I desire that the note of Mr. Kennedy, the late Secretary of the Navy, explaining his testimony, may be read, so that it may go upon the Journal.

Mr. BORLAND. Before that letter is read, it is proper for me to say, that in the investigation of what were considered abuses, in the practices in Washington, with regard to getting bills passed through Congress and obtaining the payment of claims from the Government, the testimony of the late Secretary of the Navy, (Mr. Kennedy,) contained expressions which seemed at first to reflect unfavorably upon the conduct of Purser Welch, of the Navy. The committee in examining that case, however, came to the conclusion that Purser Welch had done nothing culpable in itself, nor designed to do so. The letter which is now offered, confirms that view of the committee, and explains more fully some of the expressions used in giving the testimony before the committee. It was brought to me yesterday by Purser Welch, with the request that it should be incorporated in the report of the committee; which would have been done, had not the committee reported and been discharged from further duty. I think it is but just that this public notice should be taken of the testimony of the late Secretary of the Navy.

The letter was read as follows:

BALTIMORE, March 24, 1853.

DEAR SIR: In my testimony before the committee of the Senate in reference to the moneys which were collected by Purser Welch from the officers and crews of the Vincennes and Vandalia, as compensation to be paid for the procurement of the California law, passed at the first session of the last Congress, I took occasion to say that I was convinced, from my examination of the case, that Mr. Welch had no pecuniary interest in the transaction. I regarded his agency in the matter as reprehensible only for the effect such a practice might have on the character of the service and one which might lead to great abuses, and therefore as one that ought to be checked in future. I am persuaded that he acted in this affair solely from motives of friendship and without due consideration of the hazard to which it might expose him of being misrepresented and censured for his participation in it. I told him this in my interviews with him, and I was strongly impressed by everything that occurred at these interviews that he was entirely free from any other share in the agency than that of a disinterested purpose of serving a friend.

I make this statement with a view to guard Mr. Welch against any inference that he had any other concern in the transaction than that which I have mentioned; and I desire that it may be received as an addition to the testimony I have already given.

Very truly, my dear sir, yours, &c.,

JOHN P. KENNEDY.

Hon. Senator BORLAND.

INDIAN EXPENDITURES IN MINNESOTA.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution authorizing the Committee on Indian Affairs to delegate one of their number to proceed, during the recess of Congress, to Minnesota, for the purpose of taking the testimony of individuals in that Territory, in relation to certain charges against Governor Ramsay, connected with his distribution of money to the Sioux Indians. The pending question was on the amendment proposed by Mr. ADAMS, that the Senate appoint a committee of three to make the proposed examination.

Mr. HUNTER. I think the amendment is better than the original proposition. If we are to have this investigation, it had better be done in this way than by sending one individual. But I object to the policy of having committees sit during the recess. I object not to this particular committee, but to any and all committees sitting in the recess of Congress. I think it involves very grave considerations. I think it is a practice which is likely to involve us in disagreeable disputes with the other House. Sir, the House of Representatives have shown a disposition, for the last two or three years, to have some concern in the matter of our contingent fund. Now what powers do we propose to give this committee, in relation to this fund? Are they to have power to raise what commissions they choose, to send for witnesses in order to investigate this matter; and how and what are they to be paid? Are they to pay witnesses for their expenses? And is all that to be done out of the contingent fund? Is the President of the Senate to decide what they shall be paid? Is the Secretary of the Senate to decide, or is the chairman of the committee himself to decide what the committee shall receive? We see how many embarrassing and difficult questions we bring up in relation to that matter. Suppose we were to continue all our committees. I presume there are few committees in this body which could not find profitable occupation in the recess. Suppose we do that; would it involve the necessity of paying those committees out of the contingent fund of the Senate, during the recess, and by the action of the Senate alone? Is it to be supposed that the House of Representatives would not claim to interfere when it came to a matter of that sort?

Besides, sir, I believe there is an objection to such things in the country. I believe it is calculated to bring us into disrepute in the public estimation, and I would regard that as a calamity. We are but sixty-two individuals. It is true we have a voice in the total appropriation for the service of the country—some $50,000,000. We have, when the state of the public business in the House is considered, or rather the manner in which they conduct it, the greatest share in the legislation of the country. How important is it, therefore, to preserve appearances, to preserve the respect and esteem of the community, and to do nothing which shall bring us under a suspicion of seeking by any indirect means, to extend our pay and emoluments. I know that is not the intention of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I believe the committees would not seek employment except when they believed the public interest required it. But I am not the public. I cannot be blind to the mode in which these things are viewed outside of Congress. I believe we should resist everything which would throw us under such a suspicion as I have alluded to. Nor do I see the necessity of having any committee to look into these things. If investigations are to be had during the recess of the Senate, it would be far better to pass laws in respect to them, and to have the investigations made under the superintendence of the Executive, with a limitation by law, than to leave it to the discretion of a committee of the Senate, to be appointed to act in the recess.

Do our legislative powers continue after the Senate adjourns? Can we continue the legislative functions of a portion of this body after the Senate has adjourned? It seems to me very doubtful. I know it has been done in the case of the Library committee on some occasions, and in the case of the printing committee; but those were small matters, and they passed sub silentio, and were acquieced in. But, to appoint so many committees as we are in the habit of appointing now, to sit in the recess, makes a graver question for consideration. I believe we had, during the last recess, three or four; and unless we put a check to this practice, the number will grow, and we shall see the practice of appointing committees to sit in the recess increase at each succeeding session.

Mr. COOPER. I am a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs; and I am not in favor of the resolution as I understand it will stand if amended as proposed. I believe it is proposed to appoint a committee, or a sub-committee from the Committee on Indian Affairs, consisting of three members, to investigate, during the recess, the charges made against Governor Ramsay.

Mr. ADAMS. The proposition originally was, that one member of the committee be delegated to take the testimony. I moved to strike that out and insert, that the Senate appoint a committee of three.

Mr. COOPER. What I wish to say is, that the Indian Committee is not making any proposition of this kind, and I certainly am opposed to the committee which is proposed by the amendment, whether it is to be detailed from the Committee on Indian Affairs, or from the body of the Senate. I do not think there is any difficulty, if the Senate chooses to confer the power to do this, namely: to authorize the committee to pursue the investigation during the recess, by means of a commissioner to take testimony on interrogatories filed. That has been done in both Houses. During the last recess, one of the committees of the Senate undertook to send, and did send a committee or a commission to Mexico, to investigate certain matters in relation to charges pending against an individual who is now on his trial. I presume they did not, in that, transcend their duties. I think it would be altogether better to authorize the committee to continue the investigation in this way. Do this: authorize them to appoint a commissioner, as the courts appoint a judge or somebody else, to take testimony on interrogatories filed; and in order that it may not be lengthened out for a whole year, and increase the expense unnecessarily, let the witnesses be named, as I think we should be prepared to do in twenty-four hours. I think I know, myself, most of the witnesses that it would be necessary to call upon, in order to present the facts of this whole case to the body at its next meeting in December. I think this would be the better course to pursue. Certainly I am opposed to having a committee sit during the recess; and I concur in every word uttered by my friend from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] on the general propriety of continuing the functions of certain members of the body during the recess; though I think he was mistaken when he spoke of legislative functions attending them. It would be a quasi judicial function, such as is sometimes exercised by the body during the recess. But I certainly agree in the impropriety of continuing the committees during the recess, and there are many reasons besides those which he has stated, which may be urged against the practice.

Mr. BADGER. Besides the difficulty in the way of this mode of proceeding, thrown out by the Senators from Virginia and South Carolina the other day, it seems to me that there is still another. It was said that if the resolution in its original form were adopted, there would be no power in the member delegated by the Committee on Indian Affairs to take the testimony to compel the attendance of witnesses, or to punish a witness for contempt in case of his refusal to answer. That is true; but it is equally true with regard to a committee of the Senate, sitting in the recess of the Senate. Such a committee, if a man is called before them as a witness, and he refuses to come, or coming, refuses to answer, have no power to punish him, or compel him to answer. They must report to the House from which their commission is derived, and the authority of the House must be invoked to compel the requisite witness to discharge his duty; and if he still refuses, to inflict punishment. Therefore, if we should adopt this resolution, even as amended in the manner proposed by the Senator from Mississippi, and if the three gentlemen who compose the committee were to go into one of the States to proceed with the investigation, unless a witness was willing to proceed, they could not compel him. If he attended and refused to answer the interrogatories which they thought proper to put, they could not force him to answer. The consequence would be that it would depend entirely upon the pleasure of the persons called upon as witnesses, whether they could attend at all; and if they attended, how many and which interrogatories they would answer.

Now, sir, if this were an inquiry with regard to any general subject before the country as to matters of policy assisting the legislation of the country hereafter, that would not furnish so strong an objection; but this is an alleged official delinquency. It is an imputation of crime; and independently of all other objections which have been stated, which would seem to me to be strong, and as far as I see unanswerable, it strikes me that this ought to be sufficient to prevent the Senate proceeding in either of the modes suggested, because when you undertake to examine a charge affecting the honor, and the personal and official character of an individual, that inquiry ought to be directed in such a manner that you can enforce the examination of all who ought to speak, and their answer to all the questions necessary to put to them. If there is no power in a committee of the Senate sitting during the recess, I take it to be perfectly clear that it cannot be devolved upon an individual. If there were no law to that effect we could never confer the power upon our committees to administer oaths. It has been done by law, but the law which authorized the chairman of a select committee or standing committee to administer an oath does not authorize either him or the committee to compel the attendance of witnesses or to punish them for their refusal to attend. Therefore, I suppose the committee would be entirely powerless to perform anything.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I think, from the discussion which has taken place, that it would be utterly impossible to come to any accommodation which would suit the Senate. I must confess I have been somewhat surprised at the special considerations introduced upon this question, and at the objections which have been raised to it. Now, if the Senate will, by unanimous consent, let the resolution lie upon the table, I have consulted with the Committee on Indian Affairs, and we have come to the determination to submit another proposition to the Senate.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Before the request of my friend from Arkansas is complied with, I would like to know what is proposed to be substituted? If he is prepared now with his substitute, let it be offered before the subject passes from us.

Mr. WALKER. I am satisfied from the character of the discussion into which we have been led, that there is some cause or other on the part of gentlemen for an aversion to this investigation. I know they have said that they have no objection to the investigation; but they think that the Senate is not the proper tribunal to investigate it, notwithstanding that the Senate is the party to which the matter has been referred, and now has it under consideration. I am satisfied that from some cause or other, there is an indisposition to investigate this matter. I therefore hope that the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs will be agreed to, that the resolution will be ordered to lie on the table; and I then hope that he will follow it by a motion which will doubtless be gratifying to the Senate, that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, so that gentlemen will have the satisfaction of witnessing that going on to a greater extent, which is now going on; which is—and letters in the city prove the fact—that the Indians have entered houses of private individuals and ravaged them. I can feel on this subject because I am a frontier man.

Mr. HUNTER. For one I have opposed the proposition to raise the special committee. I have no objection to the investigation, nor do I believe that the laying of this resolution on the table will prevent it. I have no doubt that the proper Executive authority will make it. I believe a Governor of the Territory will be appointed who ex officio will be Superintendent of Indian Affairs, and he will investigate the matter. I have no objection to that; but I am opposed to the policy, and I have endeavored to show that my opposition was not to this particular proposition, but that it was one of opposition to the policy of raising select committees to sit during the recess of the Senate. That is the matter at which I am striking, and not at this particular investigation. I not only have no objection to the investigation, but I wish it to go on when it can be conducted properly. But I do not believe it is safe to pursue this practice of raising special committees, and if I had permitted this one to pass without opposition, I could not have objected to any other. I wish, if I can, to take the sense of the Senate in regard to the matter, for if we raise such committees at all I would as soon have it done in this case as in any other.

Mr. BUTLER. I made a few remarks the other day against this procedure with no aversion to the investigation, but from the belief that it would be an unconstitutional mode of proceeding. If the Senate creates a tribunal for the investigation of this matter, what can be the end of it? We cannot impeach. We cannot dismiss. We may pronounce a censure, and that is a judgment. If such a proceeding was to originate in the House of Representatives, I could understand that it would look to a purpose, or if it was laid before the Executive, I could understand that there might be some purpose in view. As to having any aversion to the investigation I have none, for I know nothing about Governor Ramsay or the other persons implicated; and in fact, if there has been a delinquency, I would like the prosecution to go on; but for the Senate to undertake the investigation is inverting everything like the usage contemplated by the Constitution in proceeding against delinquents in office. The House of Representatives ought to originate and prosecute such proceedings; and if the inquiries are to go on with the view to the removal of the man censured, it ought to be in the popular branch of the Government. That was my reason for opposing the resolution. I did not oppose it because of any aversion to the investigation.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The Committee on Indian Affairs had not any agency whatever in the starting of this investigation. The motion by which the duty was conferred upon them, came from a member of the body in no way connected with that committee. They have proceeded to a certain point in the investigation, and the only reason why the resolution was proposed to the Senate, is that they have arrived at a point in the investigation further than which it is impossible go without the authority proposed, and we cannot cease the investigation without compromising the character of the Senate, and appearing to justify a disposition to avoid bringing the act of delinquency to light. But in view of the considerations which I have heard adverted to, I will renew the motion that the resolution lie upon the table for the present, and then I will submit a motion that the Committee on Indian Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator withdraw the motion for one moment?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I withdraw it.

Mr. MALLORY. I made some slight opposition, the other day, to the appointment of a member of the committee to prosecute the investigation in the manner proposed. In doing that, I certainly had no opposition to the investigation proposed. I could have none, for I know nothing of the subject; and it was sufficient for me to know that the Committee on Indian Affairs believed that some frauds had been committed, and desired the investigation; but my opposition was made from the conviction that the mode proposed would not only be ineffectual but would interfere with the very object which the committee had in view. I will only refer to the fact that one of our special committees, of which the Senator from Texas [Mr. HOUSTON] was chairman, during the last session reported to the Senate that one of the witnesses in the city of Washington refused to testify; and the committee found itself without the means of enforcing his answering their questions, as suggested by the Senator from North Carolina. The committee then appealed to the Senate to enforce its authority. My opposition, therefore, was based upon the fact that the committee would go on and the time between this and the next session would be exhausted in proving that which we now know. I thought that no useful result could be accomplished, and therefore opposed it. I now renew the motion that the resolution lie upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I now report back from the Committee on Indian Affairs the resolution which was referred to them in relation to the charges against Governor Ramsay, and ask to be discharged from its further consideration, in order that the Senate may take such steps as it thinks proper.

Mr. CHASE. I wish to say a word in reference to the course which I have felt it my duty to pursue in regard to this matter. The Senator from Arkansas has expressed his surprise at the opposition which has been made to the resolution. I am glad that the Senator from Virginia has thought it his duty to oppose the practice which has commenced in the Senate of appointing special committees to sit during the recess. I have opposed this proposition not from any special opposition to it, but I have uniformly opposed the delegation of power to a single individual to be exercised during the recess. I have not believed that it was in the power of any committee to do it. I have not believed that it was in the power of the Senate to confer the authority upon its committee. It is, therefore, distinctly from no objection to the investigation, but from the belief that the power to grant the authority did not exist, and because I think the practice which has commenced of appointing special committees is a bad one and ought to be discontinued, that I have opposed it. I will suggest that so far as the motion to discharge the committee is concerned, at the expiration of the session the power of the committee will expire; but at the same time I have no objection to the motion.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to know how the Committee on Indian Affairs came to have this matter under consideration. It is not worth while to vote to discharge the committee unless the subject came before them under the authority of the Senate.

Mr. MASON. I would inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs if the subject was referred to the committee at the last session?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. It was.

Mr. MASON. Has it been renewed at this called session?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. It has.

The motion to discharge the committee was agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE OF MINISTER TO BRAZIL.

Mr. SEWARD submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if compatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate the correspondence between the honorable R. C. Schenck, Minister of the United States at Brazil, and the Secretary of State.

READING SECRETARY OF THE SENATE.

On motion by Mr. ADAMS, the following resolution, submitted by him yesterday, was taken up for consideration:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a reading secretary, whose duty it shall be to attend in the Senate and assist the Secretary, and to do such duties when the Senate is not in session as the Secretary may require; and he shall receive per annum, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, the same salary as the Chief Clerk of the Senate."

Mr. ADAMS. My object in calling up that resolution this morning is for the purpose of making an explanation. I am not anxious that it should be considered now. I only desire, as a matter due to the Secretary of the Senate, and the motives which induced me to offer the resolution, to explain why I did so. I understood from the Secretary that he had no regular reading clerk, and it was legitimately the business of the Chief Clerk to keep a minute of the proceedings of the Senate. The other clerk at the desk—Colonel Hickey—has duties to perform elsewhere, and his duties performed here are extra. It is necessary that there should be a reading clerk, in order to the proper organization of the desk. When I drew up the resolution it was not intended to reflect in the slightest degree, in any shape, upon our long-tried and faithful Secretary.

Mr. PETTIT. Has not the Secretary the power now to appoint the necessary clerks?

Mr. ADAMS. He has that power, I know; and the clerk whom he may appoint for the purpose indicated by the resolution, would be entitled to a compensation of $1,500 a year. The proposition which I make is to place the person to be appointed on an equality with the Chief Clerk; that was done at my own suggestion; the Secretary was not in the Chamber when I offered the resolution, or I should have consulted him about it. As the dignity of clerkships, and all other offices seems to depend very much on the amount of salary, I desired the reading secretary to be placed on an equality with the Chief Clerk, and not in a secondary position. I thought he deserved it. I believed it was necessary to enable the Secretary to procure the services of a suitable man. I do not believe a suitable man could be procured for a less compensation; and among the various extravagant expenditures of the Federal Government, we ought to expend at least a sufficient sum to have the proper organization of our desk. This was my view and no other. I am not tenacious about it. I do not wish to interfere with the Secretary in any way. As an evidence of the fact, I provide that he shall make his own selection. If I had been dissatisfied with him in any way, and had desired to supersede his rights, I would have submitted a resolution to elect the officer. I have considered it due to the Secretary, on account of the construction which I understood some gentlemen have placed upon the resolution, to make this explanation.

Mr. MASON. I move to postpone the further consideration of the resolution until Monday. We want an Executive session.

The motion was agreed to.

RINGGOLD'S COAST OF CALIFORNIA.

The following resolution, submitted by Mr. GWIN on the 17th instant, was taken up for consideration:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to purchase one thousand copies of Ringgold's maps, charts, and sailing directions of the coast of California, for the use of the Senate: Provided, The price shall not exceed four dollars per copy."

Mr. BADGER. I have no other objection to the resolution except that we have not power to pass it. I do not know whether the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BORLAND] recollects it; but by a provision contained in the deficiency appropriation bill of last session, it is expressly provided that no books shall be distributed to members of Congress, except such as are published by Congress as public documents, unless an appropriation had been by law previously made for the purpose.

Mr. MASON. The resolution will evidently lead to debate. I move to postpone its further consideration until Monday.

Mr. BORLAND. My attention has not been particularly called to that provision of the law. I had considered the subject only in reference to the value of the chart, of which I have very strong evidence before me. I have the testimony borne by the Coast Survey and from other sources as to the accuracy and value of the charts, which shows that they are now regarded by navigators as indispensable to ships which are navigating the ocean upon the Pacific coast. Whether they will come under the head of books or not, I do not know. We have procured a limited number of them, and they are in very great demand. The gentlemen from California attach very great value to them, and deem them of great importance. Navigators of established character deem them of very great importance, indispensable indeed. The Coast Survey, under whose examination they are passed, and who have made use of them in perfecting their reports, bear the very highest testimony as to their character and their indispensable necessity to all persons navigating the Pacific coast.

Mr. BADGER. I will read the provision of law:

"Be it further enacted, That hereafter no books shall be distributed to members of Congress, except such as are ordered to be printed as public documents by the Congress of which they are members: Provided, That this section shall not prohibit or interfere with the distribution, to all members who have heretofore received books under the order of either House, of the remaining volumes or parts, so as to complete the sets which they have received."

Mr. GWIN. That does not refer to these charts, and most valuable ones they are. They are not books. They are nothing but charts.

Mr. PETTIT. With the leave of the Senator from California, I will obviate all that difficulty. The resolution is to authorize their purchase for the use of the Senate. I propose to amend it so that it shall be for the use of the navigators upon the Pacific coast. That certainly will obviate the difficulty. [Laughter.]

Mr. GWIN. I accept that.

Mr. CHASE. I think we have already voted about enough for charts.

Mr. BADGER. These are new ones.

Mr. CHASE. I know it; and I have no doubt of their value as stated by the chairman of the Committee on Printing; but if they be of such value, undoubtedly those who navigate the coast can obtain them. I see no reason why the Senate should purchase them more than any other book designed for general circulation.

But a more serious objection to it is that it would be violating, if not the letter, the spirit of the law. The law was designed to prevent the purchase of books, not reports to Congress, for which no special appropriation was made; and every lawyer knows that under the general term "books," maps and charts are included. I therefore move that the resolution lie upon the table.

Mr. GWIN. Let it go over until Monday. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Virginia; but I am prepared to show that it is not a violation of the law, and that the charts are of great value.

Mr. CHASE. I withdraw my motion.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

MONDAY, March 28, 1853.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

On motion by Mr. SHIELDS, it was Ordered, That C. A. Woolley have leave to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate.

DUTIES ON IRON.

Mr. HUNTER. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to the Senate at its next annual session, the average prices annually of bar-iron, merchantable, manufactured by rolling; bar-iron, merchantable, manufactured otherwise than by rolling; railroad iron, manufactured by rolling, and pig-iron, for the last ten years preceding 1853, in the foreign markets of production or shipment; also the average prices annually of the same description of iron at New York and Pittsburg for the same period, together with the charges for freights, insurance, and commission.

It has been suggested to me by practical men that the true basis of a compromise between the producers and consumers of iron in this country would be to establish a point in the price after which no duty should be charged. It has been said that it is probable some point could be ascertained after which the duty could be taken off without injuring the producers of iron, and which would be for the benefit of the consumers—the protection being that the duty would be applied upon the iron whenever it ranged below the price named by law. For the purpose of ascertaining if such a thing be possible, inasmuch as it is very desirable to produce some sort of compromise between the producing and consuming interests, I have introduced the resolution. The question will come up at the next session. By that time the Secretary will be enabled to give us the information upon which we may act in regard to the subject. It seems to me exceedingly desirable that we should produce harmony between the great industrial interests of the country, and whenever the subject is capable of compromise we should begin in time and collect information to enable the Government to make some arrangement which may enable them all to go on harmoniously. I trust that something like this may be done. It seems to me to be a plausible idea; and without committing myself to it, I think there is so much in it as to make it desirable to have the information to enable us to act upon it hereafter.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Since 1846 or 1847, the manufacturers of railroad and other iron generally have been asking for some compromise. They have appealed more than once, I believe, to the honorable Senator from Virginia, and I am very happy to learn now that he is willing to have some compromise on the subject. I should have been much more pleased to have heard it from him some two or three years ago when those engaged in the manufacture of iron, especially of railroad iron, were suffering so terribly, and calling loudly for relief.

Mr. HUNTER. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania is not exactly aware of my purpose and agency in regard to this matter. I introduced the resolution for the purpose of seeing if something cannot be done which may satisfy the consumers of iron without injuring the producers. It has been suggested to me that here was the idea upon which some such compromise could be made. I do not know whether it can be done or not; but it is certain that at the next session we shall have to meet the question; and I submit to the Senator whether it is not better in every point to have all the information which we can obtain in regard to the subject. That is the end and object of the resolution.

I will say in relation to my own opinions, since the gentleman has referred to them, that I am a free-trade man. It is known to everybody who knows me that I am a free-trade man to this extent—that I go for duties upon revenue principles, and for the lowest duties which will bring in sufficient revenue for the purposes of the Government; but at the same time, I believe that when interests are called into existence, whether by improper legislation or not, by the action of the Government, those interests ought not to be suddenly and wantonly destroyed; and whenever the Government may choose to take the direction of reform, it should do it as gradually and slowly as may be consistent with the existence of the interests which it has called into being. My object is a kind one.

Mr. BRODHEAD. My friend from Virginia says he is a free-trade man. It is difficult to understand in what sense he is so, because not four weeks ago, he advocated upon this floor the worst kind of discrimination. He advocated a proposition to take the duties off railroad iron entirely. Is he in favor of taking them off cotton, woolen, and other species of manufactures in the country? Where, then, do we obtain the revenue? I would like to know what my friend from Virginia means by saying that he is a free-trade man? Does he mean that he is in favor of the repeal of all duties, and a resort to direct taxation? It would seem so from the fact of his advocating the abolition of duties upon railroad iron entirely; because I can see no reason whatever for taking the duty off railroad iron and not off the other articles which I have named.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator from Pennsylvania says he is at a loss to know in what sense I pronounce myself a free-trade man. I said in what sense it was. I said I was in favor of laying on duties only on revenue principles, to raise as much revenue as would be necessary for the proper administration of the Government. That defined my opinion in that respect. He says, though, that I must be for direct taxation, because I voted to take the duty off railroad iron. That does not follow. Here is a question, if I chose to go into it, in relation to the propriety of taking the duty off railroad iron, which involves the question in regard to the true principles of taxation; but I do not choose to enter into it. The Senator might have remembered, that on the occasion to which he alluded, I voted under the instructions of my State Legislature, and that during the whole time previously I had declined meddling with the subject of duties upon iron, in any way. He knows that I made no speech in regard to it. I gave a vote in accordance with instructions. And now what is the object I have in view? It is to obtain information, to see whether we may not ascertain some point in the price after which the duty may be taken off iron, not only for railroad, but for all purposes, without injury to the producing interest, reserving a provision in the law by which duties shall be laid upon iron when its price ranges below the point. I have it from good authority that there are many iron-masters who believe that this would afford the basis of a compromise. I know there are many railroad men who believe it. I do not yet pronounce upon it. I cannot do so until I have the information; but, as I said before, I think the idea is plausible enough to justify us in the effort to obtain testimony to see how far it is practicable.

The question was then taken on the resolution, and it was agreed to.

NAVAL DEPÔT AT NEWPORT.

Mr. JAMES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to inquire whether it will not be advantageous to the Government of the United States, to establish a naval depôt at Newport, Rhode Island, and that he report to the Senate at its next session.

LATE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS.

On motion by Mr. SHIELDS, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the following resolution, which was ordered on Thursday last to lie upon the table:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate pay to Robert Beale, late Sergeant-at-Arms, the salary for the residue of the present year."

Mr. SHIELDS. I hope there will be no opposition to the resolution, and if so, I do not want to say a word in relation to it. The only object I had in view in introducing it was this: the late Sergeant-at-Arms, who has served since I came into the Senate—and I think with great fidelity—and has done everything which a man could do to make himself useful to Senators, has been removed without any notice. It is well known that there has been no term fixed for these changes; that he had no previous notice; that the action of the Senate electing another person in his place, came unexpectedly upon him. He has been left with a considerable amount of property on his hands, of which of course he will be unable to dispose in such a way as to make it advantageous to himself. If there had been a term, as for instance four years, during which he knew he was to hold office, and then a new election was to come on, it would be very different; but I think this case stands upon a different footing altogether. There has been no definite term for the appointment of these officers. In fact they have looked upon themselves as here for life. It is true that the Senate has only performed its duty perhaps in reëlecting its officers; but at the same time, this falls a little hard upon this officer, who has done everything a man could do, to discharge his duty to the Senate. I hope the resolution will pass without opposition.

Mr. PETTIT. I am opposed to the resolution for the reasons which I stated the other day, and I will not trouble the Senate by repeating them. It seems to me it is without precedent and propriety. We have dismissed an officer who held his office dependent upon the will of the Senate. The Senate has expressed its will. It does not want him any longer; and why he should still be in our pay I am totally unable to see. I will ask for the yeas and nays upon the passage of the resolution.

Mr. WALKER. I am opposed to the resolution. I think it ought not to be adopted. If we do this, we shall constitute a precedent for almost everything that can be considered a gratuity. Now, can any Senator in the Chamber mention to me upon what principle the salary of the Sergeant-at-Arms should be paid to Mr. Beale for the rest of the year, unless it be upon the ground stated by the Senator from Illinois? I think that no man can mention any good ground upon which the allowance should be made. Is the ground stated by the Senator from Illinois a good one? Why, sir, have we displaced an officer who is left destitute and pennyless, and without support? Not at all. We have exercised the privilege that belonged to the Senate of electing a Sergeant-at-Arms to supersede Mr. Beale; but it is not the fact, if I understand it aright, that Mr. Beale is left in a destitute condition. He is not left as one of those helpless and poor office-holders who is suddenly taken by surprise and turned out. We shall have in every Department of the Government, in all probability, cases which will excite our commiseration much more than this; and shall the legislative branch of the Government take up the case of every clerk who is turned out by surprise, and left without anything to fall back upon, and make him an allowance for one year following his removal? I hope not. Your Treasury would be insufficient for it; and yet we propose to set an example which would be one of the most memorable of the kind in regard to one of our own officers. We pay Mr. Beale! Why the position which he occupies is not even a sinecure, and we pay the gentleman whom we have elected for the actual discharge of the duties. I can see no good reason for it.

Mr. SHIELDS. If the Senator will permit me, I do not want to go into this matter, but I will state that if there had been a term fixed for the office, and Mr. Beale had been an officer who knew he was to be removed at the expiration of that term, the case would be very different. The Sergeant-at-Arms is compelled to procure stabling and forage and make various preparations in order to manage the affairs of the Senate; and, sir, the salary proposed to be given by the resolution will not compensate Mr. Beale for the injury which he has sustained. What is it? It is at best only $1,800 a year, and the resolution proposes to pay only to the end of the fiscal year; and here he is left to dispose of forage, of stabling, of a variety of things which he had prepared in order to the performance of his duties in this body. The horses and carry-alls are all left on his hands. In my humble opinion there is a strong equity in this case. I do not say the Senate is bound to make the allowance, but I say it is equitable when an officer is cut off in the midst of the term to make an allowance.

Mr. WALKER. I believe I understand the Senator's idea. I am sorry that this last matter has been brought up. I feel as little disposition to say anything which may be afflictive to Mr. Beale's feelings as any Senator on this floor, but I must mention a fact in connection with this matter, for it seems to be the strongest ground upon which the resolution is based. I procured from the Secretary of the Senate—I made it a part of his duty to furnish me—a paper showing that during one long session of Congress there was paid to Mr. Beale for the service of his horses and his carry-alls, upwards of $5,000. Sir, the Committee on the Contingent Expenses of the Senate have been making their exertions to reduce this matter in the hands of Mr. Beale; and I must now say to the Senator that in defiance of that committee, while I was a member of it, Mr. Beale would employ his extra horses, and carry-alls, and wagons, and when the committee refused to allow it, he dogged us from one end of the Capitol to the other, and all around and over it; and in the last six days he has been dogging me, although not now a member of the committee, to use my influence with them to get the allowance of the last batch for the horses. That is the last thing for which he should be compensated. I hope that nothing more of that kind will be mentioned as a merit. I think now, to speak plainly, that the least said about the matter the better, for I should be extremely sorry, in justification of my own course, and of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, to bring forth other matters that might be, and shall be brought forth, if necessary, from my desk.

Mr. SHIELDS. As far as I am concerned, the honorable Senator can bring forth what he pleases. I know nothing about what the Committee on Contingent Expenses have done, and I have made no charges against that committee, far from it. I presume Mr. Beale received no money out of the contingent fund that was not allowed him by the Senate. Whether it was allowed by the committee or not, I know not. The Senate must have supposed that they gave that money for some object. I cannot understand the honorable Senator when he says that this money has been allowed to Mr. Beale against the wishes of the Senate for extra services. Is that what I am to understand? I know nothing of that. All I say is—and I understand the honorable Senator does not pretend to gainsay it—that Mr. Beale is left with a large amount of property on his hands which he had to procure for the service of the Senate.

Mr. WALKER. If the honorable Senator will allow me, I will state that he was authorized, if I understood the last order of the Senate aright, to employ one wagon for the mail service, and one for document purposes. Now, if that is the great amount to be left upon his hands, and he is to be paid a year's salary in consequence of it, be it so. I do not think they would be a great burden to him. I understand that horses and wagons bring pretty good prices here. I mentioned the fact of the large receipts that he had to show that the ground of sympathy for him is not well taken, and that we ought not to be called upon on such a ground to make him an allowance which in reality, on the score of sympathy or anything else, is not due to him.

Mr. BAYARD. I am opposed generally to everything like contingent allowances, and shall always be. I think I stated the other day that they necessarily lead to corruption. The case, however, now before us seems to me to form an exception. The practice of the Senate has hitherto been for its officers to hold during pleasure, without any specific term, without any known time at which the office would expire and they would be liable to reëlection. Suddenly, during an Executive session, you removed the late Sergeant-at-Arms, without notice, without investigation. I do not know that there was any ground of objection, but simply on the ground of mere will, by which you choose to place a new person in the situation. The act was right and proper in itself, if in the judgment of Senators they could procure a better officer by so doing; but when no charges were made, I think by the general practice and usage of the Senate, it would be an act of ordinary liberality to make the allowance which the resolution proposes. It is widely different from the case of an officer who holds office for a specific term, when he knows his office will terminate unless he is reëlected or reappointed. Such has not hitherto been the practice of the Senate. It is for these reasons that I am disposed to vote for the allowance, because unless we make it, it will seem like an implied reflection upon the character of the officer.

The resolution was then reported to the Senate without amendment, and was read a third time. On the question of its passage the yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken, resulted—yeas 27, nays 12, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Brodhead, Butler, Clayton, Cooper, Dodge of Wisconsin, Everett, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, James, Morton, Norris, Phelps, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Smith, Soulé, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, and Wright—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atherton, Borland, Chase, Evans, Houston, Mason, Pettit, Sumner, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—12.

So the resolution was passed.

Mr. BRODHEAD subsequently moved a reconsideration of the vote, and said: I thought that the resolution made the allowance for the residue of the fiscal year which ends in June; but upon a critical examination of it, I think it may be construed to extend the pay until December next. It says "the present year." I understood, in the hurry and confusion which prevailed in the Chamber—for there is a good deal of "noise and confusion" here—that it was during the fiscal year.

Mr. SHIELDS. My intention was that it should be so understood. I have no objection to inserting "fiscal." The alteration can be made by common consent.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to, and the question recurred on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I move to insert "fiscal" before "year."

Mr. SHIELDS. At the same time, to save any further difficulty, I move to insert "out of the contingent fund of the Senate," after "pay."

The amendments were agreed to, and the resolution as amended was passed.

READING SECRETARY.

Mr. ADAMS moved to take up the resolution submitted by him some days since in relation to the appointment of a reading secretary; but the motion was lost; there being on a division—ayes 10, noes not counted.

RINGGOLD'S CHARTS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to purchase one thousand copies of Ringgold's maps, charts, and sailing directions, of the coast of California, for the use of navigators upon that coast: Provided, The price shall not exceed four dollars per copy."

Mr. MASON. I think very clearly that the resolution is against the meaning, if it is not within the letter, of the act of the last session, to which you, Mr. President, (Mr. BADGER in the chair,) called the attention of the Senate on Saturday, prohibiting the purchase of books, unless by a joint vote of the two Houses. I think that is a sufficient objection to it; but were it not so, I think it incumbent upon me to vote against the resolution; and to state my reason for doing so. The gentleman who compiled the charts is one that I have the fortune to know personally and well, and I apprehend a more meritorious and distinguished officer does not belong to the service. He has rendered very great service in compiling these charts. It afforded me pleasure at a former day to go with the majority of the Senate for their publication; and I think they were published by an order of the Senate, as an act of deserved distinction to the officer who compiled them; and at the same time the Senate provided that a certain number of copies should be purchased. I think it would be not only wrong, but in bad taste for the Senate to go further in making the purchase. I have no doubt, from the evidence of which we have heard, as well as from the ability of the compiler of the charts, that they are very useful to navigators on the Pacific coast; but I have yet to learn, and if I should learn it would be with great concern, that it is the province of the Senate to enter on the course of purchasing charts for the use of navigators. If they are required, as doubtless they are, there is an abundance of money ability in those who use them to purchase them. I shall therefore vote against the resolution.

Mr. GWIN. In regard to the first objection which is made to the resolution, I will merely say that the charts are not a book; and we published at this session, by order of the Committee on Printing, fifteen hundred extra copies of a chart, showing the route from California to Shanghai for mail steamers, which was very similar in its character, though not so accurate as this. But in regard to this work, I have reason to know this officer of the Navy, of whom I can speak in as much praise as the Senator from Virginia. He lost largely by the publication of the charts, and I wish, on my part, to remunerate him, and through the hands of the Secretary of the Navy to put the charts in possession of those who navigate those waters. I am perfectly confident that we cannot make an expenditure of an equal amount by which more good can be brought to the Government than by purchasing these maps; but I will not detain the Senate.

Mr. BORLAND. I wish to say to the Senator from Virginia, that I think he is mistaken in supposing that Congress published these charts. They were published, I believe, by Captain Ringgold himself, and Congress purchased some of them.

Mr. MASON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BORLAND. They were published at his own expense. At first I was opposed to the resolution, but when I have evidence furnished me from the Coast Survey office, and from other distinguished and competent sources, of their great value, indeed of their almost indispensable necessity to all our ships navigating the Pacific coast, and when I ascertained further, that the compiler has not been reimbursed by several thousand dollars for the cost which he has personally incurred, I am in favor of the resolution. He has conferred upon navigation in all that coast of the country, one of the greatest benefits which ever has been conferred. We have the testimony of the Coast Survey, that in the preparation of the maps which they have since made, they derived great benefit from these charts, and found them indispensable to the work, and saved a large expense and labor by having them. If we purchase these charts, it will be for the benefit of navigation. The compiler has incurred great expense, and has not yet been reimbursed; and it does seem to me nothing more than simple justice—to say nothing of the benefit conferred upon the interests of navigation—to pay him as much for the use of the work as it cost him; and the additional copies which we propose to purchase will not do more than repay the money which he has paid out, and which has gone to the benefit of the country.

Mr. BAYARD called for the yeas and nays on the resolution, and they were ordered.

Mr. CHASE. I desire simply to say that the remarks submitted by the Senator from California would convince me, if I needed any conviction upon this subject, that this is a very meritorious work; and I would cheerfully vote for the resolution, if I were not fully satisfied that it is against both the letter and spirit of the prohibition in the law; and I trust the Senate will not, at this special session, violate a law which they assisted in passing at the close of the last session.

It is said that this does not fall within the letter of the law because it is a chart. Sir, there are numerous decisions, as all lawyers know, which establish the doctrine that the word "book" does in point of fact comprehend charts. That is the legal sense of the term. It is a sense which of course would apply to the word "books" in the law to which reference is made. If, then, we pass the resolution it will certainly, according to the import of language, violate that law.

Mr. BAYARD. The objection mentioned by the Senator from Ohio is the only reason why I must vote against this resolution. Were it a joint resolution, I am inclined to think I would vote cheerfully for it. But the law to which reference is made, clearly, in its letter and intent, restrains the action of the Senate in this matter, and I cannot violate that law.

Mr. BORLAND. I shall not contend with the Senators who have just spoken, upon the meaning which they attach to the word "chart" and the similarity of meaning which they seem to think exists between that and the word "book;" but there is another ground which I think very satisfactory, upon which this proposition is not excluded by the terms of the law. The third section of the act referred to, in which the prohibition is made, is in these words:

"That hereafter no books shall be distributed to members of Congress except such as are ordered to be printed by the Congress of which they are members."

We well know the reason for that. We well know that there was a great complaint that members of Congress were in the habit of voting themselves large quantities of books to be paid for out of the contingent fund of the respective Houses. It was considered an abuse; and the cry had gone through the country and got into the newspapers that we were voting ourselves libraries. The section which I have read was intended to meet that case. But, sir, here is a very different thing. It is proposed to purchase a valuable chart, call it a book if you please, which the interests of navigation very much require, because our commerce upon the Pacific ocean is very rapidly extending and increasing; and it is also intended, as I said, while subserving that great public purpose, to reimburse a meritorious public officer, who, at his own expense, published the work and has not yet received any return for it, notwithstanding its great public value. He is yet out of pocket several thousand dollars. By passing the resolution, therefore, we shall not disregard the law, but we shall subserve the public interest and at the same time do an act of justice to a meritorious officer.

The yeas and nays being taken on the resolution, resulted—yeas 22, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atherton, Borland, Brodhead, Dodge of Wisconsin, Douglas, Everett, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, Morton, Norris, Pettit, Pratt, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, and Weller—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Butler, Chase, Clayton, Evans, Fish, Mason, Phelps, Smith, Soulé, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Toucey, and Wright—16.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT. I would suggest to the Senator from California, the propriety of making some alteration in the terms of the resolution, because it occurs to me, that under it, there is no power conferred to distribute the charts. The law of last session prohibits their being distributed to Senators when they are purchased. Where are they to go?

Mr. BUTLER. To navigators.

Mr. PRATT. How are they to get to navigators? I suggest that the resolution needs some modification in that respect.

Mr. BORLAND. I suppose, in authorizing the Secretary to purchase the charts for the use of navigators, there is a general power given to him to put them into the hands of navigators. That follows as a necessary consequence; and we are to suppose that he will take a common-sense view of the subject, and adopt some reasonable practicable plan by which they will go into the hands of those for whom they are intended.

Mr. BAYARD. Where is the authority on the part of any officer of this body to turn these books over to any one else? Where does it spring from? When I made my remarks upon the resolution, I supposed it stood as it was originally framed "for the use of the members of the Senate." Where is your warrant for publishing books, by order of the Senate, for distribution by any other persons than Senators? It seems to me that the resolution is more objectionable in the form in which it passed than it was originally. It contains no provision as to who is to distribute the charts. We are told that the Navy Department will do it. How is the Navy Department to get them? Under the resolution who is to delegate the power to it to distribute them? When you print books for the use of the Senate, you have a general rule for their distribution; but you have none to apply to this at all. The charts may be bought, but they will lie here and require the subsequent action of the Senate, or both Houses, in order to distribute them.

The PRESIDENT. The resolution cannot be altered unless by unanimous consent, or by moving a reconsideration.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. WALKER. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That hereafter the hour of meeting of the Senate shall be ten o'clock, a. m., until otherwise ordered by the Senate.

I will state to the Senate the reason why I shall ask for the consideration of that resolution at this time. As we meet now, we do not sit while the Cabinet are in Cabinet council. They are in council during the morning, and come out about the same time we commence our session. We therefore cannot see them while we are idling away the morning. When our hour of meeting arrives, they have left Cabinet council and gone to the Departments. Then we commence our sitting, and the result is that a great many Senators who have business at the Departments have to go away, and we are left often without a quorum. Now, I have no doubt that there are a great many Senators who have business to attend to at the Departments which they must transact, and they have gone away to attend to it, and I should not be surprised in a short time to-day, and on every subsequent day, after this hour, to find ourselves left without a quorum. If we can meet at ten o'clock, and sit until one, we shall be sitting during the time when the Cabinet are in council, and the Cabinet council and the session of the Senate will break up about the same time, and then we can have an opportunity to transact our business at the Departments. It is for this reason that I offer the resolution, and ask for its consideration now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does any Senator object to considerimg the resolution at this time?

Mr. SEWARD and Mr. BUTLER. I object.

Mr. WALKER. Withdraw the objection.

Mr. BUTLER. I cannot withdraw the objecaion. I think our hour of meeting is well arranged its it is. The Senate ought to deliberate separately and let the Cabinet officers do their own business. This thing of Senators going to transact business with the Departments and making an excuse for altering our hour of meeting is all wrong. Whatever business they have with the Departments ought to be done in writing.

Mr. WALKER. I do not mean that this is to give Senators an opportunity to go to the Cabinet councils—of course they cannot get there. But there are many Senators who desire to see the heads of Departments on business; and the Cabinet council breaks up just about the time that we go into session now, and consequently we have no opportunity to attend to our departmental business. If we go to the Departments in the morning we cannot find the heads of the Departments, for they are in Cabinet council, and as soon as they come out of council our session commences, so that we have no time to see them; but if we should meet at ten and adjourn at one we could attend to departmental business and senatorial business also. The Senator asks me what business I have at the Departments?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not.

Mr. WALKER. I do not know whether the Senator has any or not, but I can tell him that if he hailed from Wisconsin or any of the western or northern States, he would find the duty an onerous one, which could not be thrown off. It is imposed upon us, and some time must be taken to attend to it; and I will say that if the Senate continues meeting at the time at which we now meet, and are in session the only time when we can see the members of the Cabinet, I shall be compelled to leave the Senate at some hour of the day to attend to my business at the Departments.

Mr. PETTIT. I simply desire to say to the Senator from Wisconsin, that I object to one of his remarks, and that is the one which indicates that we are idle in the forenoon. I do not know any Senator who is idle. [Laughter.]

Mr. SEWARD. I desire to ask the Senator from Wisconsin, whether the Cabinet have expressed any particular desire to see more of the Senate than they can see now? If they have not, I shall object to the resolution.

Mr. WALKER. We are not consulting their comfort. We do not propose to ask them when we shall go; and I do not propose to ask the Senator from New York, nor will my constituents, who have imposed the duty upon me be likely to ask him, as to when and how I shall attend to the duty. I presume those of us who have business to attend to, will do it whether the Cabinet are willing to see us or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the consideration of the resolution is objected to, it goes over one day under the rule.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business, and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened,

And the Senate adjourned.

TUESDAY, March 29, 1853.

Prayer by the Rev. J. G. BUTLER.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That Avery Downer have leave to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate.

FOLDING OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. BADGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be authorized to continue the messengers in the employment of the Senate, for two months after the termination of the present session, for the purpose of folding and transmitting documents.

READING CLERK.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to take up the resolution which I submitted a few days ago, in relation to a reading secretary. I will state to Senators that if it is taken up I will make such a modification of it as I suppose will make it acceptable to every one.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to modify the resolution, so that it will read as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to employ a clerk, who shall, under his direction, read at the desk of the Secretary and discharge such other duties as the Secretary may assign him; and who shall receive the same compensation as the principal clerk."

I will state, in a very few words, the substance of an explanation which I made a few days ago. I understand that the duties legitimately belonging to the Chief Clerk, are to keep a minute of the proceedings of the Senate and to make up the record; that the duties performed at the desk by Colonel Hickey are extra duties; and this proposition is to relieve him. His business, which is enough for any one man to perform, is elsewhere, and not at the desk. The resolution is only to authorize a proper organization of that desk. I think we are entitled to it. It increases the compensation allowed, from $1,500 to $1,800—which I apprehend is not unreasonable. I think really that there can be no serious objection to the resolution. It is intended not to affect any one's rights, but to enable the Secretary to perform, in a proper manner, the duties which devolve upon him. It meets his approbation, and that of all concerned, so far as I know.

Mr. MASON. I very respectfully submit to the Senator from Mississippi, whether it would not be proper to let the matter lie for the present. We do not now want a reading clerk. We may want one at the next session. There is no reason in the world why we should go into an organization of the officers of the Senate at the close of this special session. I have heard a great deal on this subject. I have read some things about it, and I am strongly disposed to think that the officers of the Senate, the police officers, the ministerial agents, and probably those in the office of the Secretary of the Senate may want some organization. I am disposed to think it would be found expedient at the commencement of the next session to refer the subject to a committee to ascertain what the existing organization is, and inquire into the necessity which may exist for reorganization. If no other Senator should move in it, I may feel it incumbent upon me to ask for a committee at the next session to take into consideration the reorganization of the whole department of our officers. For the present, however, to test the sense of the Senate, I move that the resolution lie upon the table.

The motion was not agreed to, there being on a division—ayes 14, noes 18.

Mr. BUTLER. I am sure such an officer as the resolution proposes to appoint is not necessary now. The desk does not require it; the business of the Senate does not require it; and who is it that requires an additional officer at this time—at the close of this session? Is the resolution proposed with the view that the Secretary shall select from his own clerks one to fill the office, or select one that he may think entirely suitable? or is it that there is somebody who wants the office, who is in the view of the gentleman who moves the resolution?

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator will allow me, I will inform him that the resolution authorizes the Secretary to select whoever he may think proper.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand a little behind these things. [Laughter.] I suppose the Secretary has a pretty strong hint of who the incumbent is to be. Mr. President, if our patronage were to be dispensed in this way, I would have it that the gentleman who is to be selected for it, if an additional one be selected, should be some aspiring literary young man who, with $1,500 or $1,800 a year, would be enabled to improve his mind in the Library. I would have a man of literature, not one who is identified merely with party. If I had the assurance that the office would be disposed upon a man who would avail himself of the opportunity to improve his mind upon the subject of literature—some young clergyman, or young man looking to a distinction of that kind—perhaps I might be less reluctant upon the subject; but at the close of the session I do not like to see the Senate subjected to terms to have an appointment made when there is no occasion for it; and I shall therefore vote against the resolution.

Mr. CHASE. I am quite satisfied that the officer is not needed at this session. We cannot tell what we may need at the next session; and in order that we may act with all the lights before us, I move that the subject be postponed until the first Monday in December next.

Mr. BAYARD called for the yeas and nays on the motion, and they were ordered.

Mr. WALKER. Would it be in order to propose an amendment to the resolution now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BADGER in the chair.) It will not be in order pending the motion to postpone.

Mr. BORLAND. I shall vote for the postponement, for the reasons which have been so well stated by the Senators from Virginia and South Carolina, that at this session, at any rate, we do not need the addition to our clerical force, and that at the beginning of the next long session, if we do need it, we can take the subject up and dispose of it deliberately. We shall then have plenty of time before business accumulates on our hands, and we shall avoid the incurring of what I consider a very unnecessary expense, and also the doing with a very thin Senate—a bare quorum I apprehend—what would seem more properly to belong to a full Senate at the beginning of a new Congress.

Mr. ADAMS. This is a matter in which I have no feeling; but I deemed it necessary to introduce the resolution, for the advantage and convenience of the Senate. My opinion is that not one man out of ten thousand reading clerks, can be procured to discharge, in a suitable manner, the duties intended to be assigned to the individual embraced in the resolution, and I therefore desire to give the Secretary time to make the selection. It is a matter of very little patronage. Three hundred dollars a year, for the convenience of the Senate!

Mr. BORLAND. Eighteen hundred dollars.

Mr. ADAMS. That is the salary which the resolution proposes to allow; but the Secretary is now authorized to give $1,500, if he should choose to appoint a person. Talk about patronage! Economical as I usually am, no objection on the score of economy entered into my mind to such a proposition. But as I said before, I have no feeling in the matter. If it is the pleasure of the Senate to postpone it indefinitely, I have a convenient seat near the desk, where I can hear any reading that may be thought necessary. I have deemed it a matter of importance, for the convenience of the Secretary, that the Secretary should have the opportunity of selecting the individual. Having confidence, as I have, in his discretion, I embraced in the resolution the privilege of suffering him to make the appointment. All I ask now is a vote.

Mr. WALKER. It is said that the Secretary has the power to appoint a $1,500 clerk, and that the resolution, in its operation, only increases the pay $300. Now, sir, we are at the close of an Executive session; very nearly nine months are to pass away before we shall enter upon the duties of another session; and suppose the Secretary should now exercise the power to appoint a reading clerk at $1,500 per annum, three fourths of whose salary would run on when he had not a word of reading to do, what would you say? For one, I am in favor of visiting, by investigation and punishment, those who are guilty of wrong-doing; and I say emphatically that I should be after him, for one, if he should exercise that power. I believe the Senate would revolt at the idea that he should employ a reading clerk whose salary should run nine months in the vacation of the Senate to start with. We propose, then, to do what we would censure the Secretary for doing. We are asked to resort to the unjustifiable patronage of employing a reading clerk for the Secretary, to sit down for nine months without the necessity of opening his mouth to read one word. That is the proposition. And besides, what do we want with more clerks at the Secretary's desk? I asked you, sir, if it was in order to offer an amendment. I have one here, which, if the original resolution be adopted, should also be adopted. It is to add to it the words,

"And that the desk of the Secretary be lengthened about five feet, five-and-a-half, or six feet."

Sir, it would be necessary to have more room there, if you get another reading clerk; for unless you extend the desk there will be no place for him to sit. We are to appoint a clerk to read nine months for us when we are scattered all over the Union! An act for which, if performed by the Secretary, we should censure him; yet it is proposed to pass the resolution and do it ourselves.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand from the Senator from Mississippi, that this clerk is to be a man of very rare endowments. I believe he said that not one in ten thousand could be got exactly suitable. I suppose, then, the object of the resolution is to authorize the Secretary of the Senate to employ a person who, during the nine months between now and the commencement of the next session, may come here and rehearse. I should like to hear the rehearsals, and the gentleman's practice in elocution. It would be an exhibition worth witnessing. Who would not come here every morning to hear that fellow sing out until he had almost got the records by heart? [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that my remarks justified no such criticism as he has thought proper to put upon them with his great facility of turning everything into ridicule. I only suggested that there were but few reading clerks who would answer the purpose, and I desired to give the Secretary time to look around him to make the selection. How the Senator can, from my remarks, come to the extraordinary conclusion to which he arrives, I cannot see, though for that gentleman to come to an extraordinary conclusion is not strange.

Mr. BUTLER. I had not given up the floor when the Senator from Mississippi anticipated me.

I do not think the public service is so urgent that it is necessary to make an appointment at this time. That is my opinion. The Senator wants an opportunity for the Secretary to look around that he may determine whom to select. In that case I would advise the Secretary to attend the theater. [Laughter.] Very good voices can be found there, somtimes; but I rather think there is very little necessity to look around if the man is already decided upon.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have taken no part in this matter. I have not been consulted as to the propriety of offering the resolution; but as there is an attempt, on the part of the Senator from South Carolina, to ridicule it, I will say that I am of the opinion that a reform in the reading here is necessary. I believe the Senate thinks so. There is a complaint that while our duties are discharged well in other respects, the reading is not done intelligibly. There is no use in our avoiding or trying to conceal the fact. We all confess it to one another. Why then not meet the evil and remedy it? For one I am in favor of doing it, and doing it now or at the next session. I would prefer that the resolution should say that the duties and pay of the person to be appointed should commence at the next session, though he may be appointed in the mean time.

Mr. ADAMS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have no faith in these reforms which are to commence at the next session, and then at the next and the next, so that they are postponed interminably, and never acted on at all. I think, sir, we had better meet the question, and if we need a reading clerk let us have him. Perhaps we have clerks enough. I have no complaint to make except upon the point which I have mentioned, and upon that there is a universal complaint, not only by the Senate, but by all who witness our proceedings. It is true; and we may as well acknowledge it as try to conceal it. For one I think we ought to act, and act promptly and boldly; but let the pay commence when the service commences.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Mississippi to modify his resolution according to the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MASON. In reply to the Senator from Illinois, I desire to say that I suspect my nerves are as sensitive to the proprieties of reading as his or other Senators, yet I have never had occasion to complain of the manner in which papers and documents are read at our desk. I will not specify the officers by name, but there are those who read habitually at that desk, who read better than most men we find. They read in a most articulate and distinct tone, and with a propriety which it is difficult to attain. It may not be so when the proper reader is engaged in other duties, and a substitute is in his place. In the attempt of the honorable Senator to reform, he may make a change, but I doubt exceedingly whether he will make an improvement. Of course I do not know who it is proposed to put in the place of our present reading clerk, but I have heard the name of one person mentioned whom I have heard read, and read a great deal in the other wing of this Capitol; and a more discordant, nasal, sawing tone than he possesses I have never heard. I do not know whom it is proposed to put there. I have no doubt if the resolution should pass, and the Secretary is left to himself, he will make as judicious a selection as he can; but it is a very difficult thing to select a competent reader; and I should very much apprehend, instead of a reform, we should have an alteration very much for the worse.

Mr. WALKER. I wish to join with the Senator from Virginia, in saying that I cannot think the complaint that our reading has been imperfect has been universal.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not complain.

Mr. WALKER. For my own part I can bear testimony with the Senator from Virginia, that the reading at our desk is the best I ever heard; and if the Senator from Illinois cannot distinctly hear it, let him complain of those who stand behind him, and near to him, who make noise by their talk and their movements, and not complain of the Secretary. It will be difficult for us to get a better reader than the one whom we now have. I never heard a person who could take up different handwritings, and read them with so little hesitation as that gentleman. I have wondered at it. I believe in one instance which I recollect, he misread a word, but it was so peculiar that he immediately became aware of the fact, and it was a subject of amusement to me. In reading the word "railroad," he called it "nailrod," and that I believe was the only mistake I ever heard him make. That was during the time when the subject of Pennsylvania iron was before us, and I do not wonder that nailrod and railroad iron should have been jointly occupying the mind of the reader.

But I do not know where the Senator has heard so much of these complaints. Doubtless he feels that there is a defect in the reading, but I think he attributes it to the wrong source. He is in the outside circle of seats in the Senate, and there is a good deal of noise there, and he doubtless has more reason to complain than those of us who are not so much subjected to the noise and confusion which surrounds him. Sir, I should regret exceedingly to see the risk run of getting a worse reader; and we have the testimony of the Senator from Virginia, that if the prominent man who is set up for this position should be selected, we shall have no reform, but a step backward in the conveniences adopted for the Senate. If it is intended to bring in a clerk here, new and inexperienced, who is to rank the old corps of clerks, who is to stand at the head of them, put them down and take precedence of them, I think it might justly be a subject of complaint. I hope it will not be done. I think we have tried our present clerks sufficiently to know that they will bear the test; and if we bring in a new clerk and put him over them, it may be a great inconvenience to us, and a great injustice both to the feelings and to the interests of the men whom we have so long tried. I think we shall be running a risk in doing it, and I am sorry to see the Senator from Illinois come forward with his influence to aid the proposition. I believe the resolution had better be postponed. I hope it will be, and that we shall at all events take the time which is proposed to be given to the Secretary to reflect and select, for our own reflection before we act in the matter.

Mr. PHELPS. During the short period of my service in this body, I have never heard the complaints of bad reading at the desk. That short period amounts now to about thirteen years, during which time we have had the same Secretary and I believe the same reading clerk. I have heard complaints that the reading at the desk could not be heard. I have had occasion very often to make that complaint; but the difficulty is not at the desk; it has grown out of a practice, which practice has grown up since I have been here, of admitting so many on the floor of the Senate. It is the conversation, the confusion produced by the introduction of persons who have no business here, which, in my judgment, produces the difficulty.

Now, Mr. President, I will ask a question which has been asked before. Where is the necessity of acting now? What duties is this new clerk to perform? Is there any deficiency in the force in the Secretary's office? It seems to me, that there is not. I think it will be a waste of money to appoint a reading clerk whose salary is to run from this time to the commencement of the next session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that the Senator who offered the resolution has modified it by directing the compensation to commence on the first day of the next session.

Mr. ADAMS. I will add that the Secretary will have until that time to make the selection.

Mr. PHELPS. Then, I have only to add that I think the next Congress can take care of its own affairs, without our making such a preparation. I may as well speak plainly. I have regarded this rather as a movement—though not perhaps so intended—to increase the patronage of the body; and I confess it reminded me of a presiding officer of a town meeting in Rhode Island, which was called for the purpose of electing a member of the Legislature, who opened the meeting and then called upon them to cast their votes for Dick Harris for the town's representative.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think the corps of clerks which we have now is sufficient, and I agree with the gentlemen who say that they are indisposed to bring in a new man to rank our clerks. I do not agree with my colleague that the reading here is bad or indifferent; on the contrary, when I contrast it with that in the House, I think we have excellent reading. In the House they have bawling and shouting; here we have reading: our clerk reads like a gentleman. I might have no hesitation in agreeing to something of this kind, if it were not that our Chief Clerk, one of the most faithful officers of the Senate, is to be superseded by it.

Mr. ADAMS. Not at all.

Mr. SHIELDS. Well, another is to be placed above him. That will be the effect of it, and it would be a great injustice. We all know that he has discharged his duties faithfully, and to the satisfaction of every one, not only at the desk but away from the desk. He has performed an amount of labor to my own knowledge that has astonished me; and I think it would be great injustice to bring in a man, not to supersede him exactly, but to rank him, for that is what it amounts to. If you make a change, place him in the position proposed, and let another take his place. That would be doing something like justice.

Mr. ADAMS. If the effect be as the Senator from Illinois seems to think, I certainly did not so intend it. One object in introducing the resolution, was to relieve the clerk to whom he has referred, Colonel Hickey, from the extra service which he now performs. We know that the duties which properly belong to him, could not be attended to by any other man, or at least, not without a great deal of experience; and it was in part, to relieve him from extraordinary labor, that I introduced the resolution.

Mr. SHIELDS. That is what I understand; but if we relieve him, let us do it by placing him in a higher position, and another in his place, for I apprehend we cannot get a better reader than Colonel Hickey, at least I have to hear a reader who satisfies me better than he does. I will ask another question. Do our officers ask for the change? Do they require this assistance? Does this emanate from them? If so, I would like to know it.

Mr. ADAMS. I can state that I am informed by the Secretary, that the legitimate business of the Chief Clerk, is to keep the minutes and record of the proceedings of the Senate; that the proper business belonging to the other clerk (Colonel Hickey) does not require him to come to the desk at all, but the duties which he performs here, are extra duties; that he needs aid. He did not ask this to be done, but he informed me that he needed a clerk whose business it would be to read.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not wish to protract this discussion, but as I have been brought into the debate justice requires me to bear my testimony, as far as it may be, as a matter of criticism. It has been said by the honorable Senator from Illinois, [Mr. Douglas,] that there is universal complaint that the reading at our desk is not done in a way acceptable to the Senate. I say I have heard of no such universal complaint, and if I were to pronounce a criticism, it would be that in pronunciation, emphasis, and deliberation—I do not say enunciation, because it may not be loud enough to suit the ears of some gentlemen, but in pronunciation, emphasis, and that deliberate intonation which can express the meaning of the paper—I think it is done with admirable propriety at our desk, and especially as regards the pronunciation of proper names. I say it is done with beautiful propriety. You may get a reader who can talk louder and speak as though he were calling for a ferry-man on the other side of the Potomac, or so fast that he could count shot rolled down from the Capitol. [Laughter.] You may have one with all that mechanical skill, loudness, facility, and rapidity, but as a matter of criticism, I do not agree that it suits my taste. It is a matter of taste; that is all. De gustibus non est disputandum.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I certainly have no special interest in this matter. I spoke of the complaint, which I thought was generally conceded to exist, and which I really believe has been smothered by kind feelings towards the officers. But it is more agreeable to us all to get up and compliment gentlemen, than to complain; and if I had consulted my own feelings of delicacy, I would have complimented too, and aided in throwing this matter over; but I have thought for years that that complaint did exist. As my colleague has, injudiciously, I think, referred to one of the clerks by name, I will state that I have never seen a man in the public service whose business talents and prompt performance of duties, I more universally admired than those of Colonel Hickey.

I have no special desire about this matter. If the Senate are content, very well. I had nothing to do in originating it. I was not consulted about it; but when I saw an attempt to laugh it out of the Senate, I felt it due to frankness to express what I have so often heard in private—a deep anxiety that we could remedy it without changing the Secretary. I do believe that most of the desire to change the Secretary of the Senate, has arisen from the wish to remedy that evil; and my impression is that it will terminate in changing the Secretary in order to remedy the evil. But perhaps that is a mistake; I do not desire to see that. I have no feeling on the subject, and if the Senate are content with the reading, I have no more to say on the subject.

Mr. BORLAND. I never cast censure upon any one, if it be possible to avoid it, and I do not unnecessarily take any occasion to pay compliments; but the subject has been introduced, and as some difference of opinion has been expressed, I feel it but an act of justice, to say for myself, so far as the reading has been done by the gentleman referred to, I have not only been satisfied, but eminently gratified with it, on all occasions, and I should be sorry, as a member of the body, to see any change made, whereby we should lose his services in this particular.

Mr. DOUGLAS. To whom does the Senator allude?

Mr. BORLAND. To the one whose name the Senator mentioned—Colonel Hickey.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not understand that he has been reading clerk at all. I confess, if I am driven to particulars, that I think Colonel Hickey is the best officer at the desk; but I did not, in the first place, refer to him.

Mr. BORLAND. I have various reasons for opposing the resolution which has been offered, but if there is one stronger than another that induces me to oppose it, it is the fear of losing the services of that officer.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the motion to postpone the consideration of the resolution until the first Monday in December next, resulted—yeas 25, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bayard, Borland, Butler, Chase, Clayton, Evans, Everett, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Houston, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, Mason, Morton, Phelps, Pratt, Seward, Shields, Smith, Soulé, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Walker, and Wright—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Atherton, Brodhead, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Hamlin, Norris, Pettit, Rusk, Sebastian, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, and Weller—16.

So the motion was agreed to.

STUART'S NAVAL WORKS.

Mr. MORTON. Some days since I introduced a resolution directing the Secretary of the Senate to purchase for the use of the Senate five hundred copies of two works called "The Naval Dry Docks of the United States," and "The Naval and Mail Steamers of the United States," by the Engineer-in-Chief of the Navy. The works are very valuable, and I should have liked very much to have them purchased for distribution; but on reference to a clause in the deficiency bill of last session, to which reference was made yesterday, I see that it excludes such a proposition, and I therefore ask leave to withdraw the resolution.

Mr. SEWARD. I suppose that requires unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator has no particular desire to withdraw the resolution, it can lie on the table without being acted upon.

Mr. MORTON. I do not desire its consideration. It was called up yesterday, and passed over at my request, and for the reason which I have stated I do not desire it to be acted upon. It is immaterial to me how it is disposed of.

HOUR OF MEETING.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. WALKER yesterday, changing the hour of meeting to ten o'clock, a. m.

Mr. MASON. I intended to have said, when that resolution was up before, that I think it would be particularly inopportune now. The object is that we may adjourn by one o'clock. Now, sir, we were called here particularly to deliberate upon Executive nominations, and those nominations generally come in between one and two, and we ought therefore to be in session then.

Mr. WALKER. I do not know whether I am correct or not; but my impression is that we do not get the nominations of one day until the day subsequent. My desires are not otherwise than I expressed yesterday, to sit here while the Cabinet are in session, so that we may have an opportunity to attend to business at the Departments.

Mr. MASON. I move to postpone the further consideration of the resolution until to-morrow, for the purpose of going into Executive session.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

THE MEXICAN BOUNDARY.

Mr. HOUSTON submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That John R. Bartlett, late Commissioner, and A. B. Gray, late United States Surveyor of the Mexican Boundary, be authorized to furnish a report and plans to the Senate of the explorations made by them and by others connected with the Commission under them, on the topography, geography, and natural history of the regions adjacent to the line, with such information as was collected relative to the Indian tribes through Texas, California, and New Mexico; and that the work be executed under the supervision of the Department of the Interior in a style and form corresponding with the publication of "The History, Condition, and Prospects of the Indian Tribes," of H. R. Schoolcraft, now in course of publication, and Owen's Report on the Geology of Lake Superior: Provided, That the same shall not exceed two volumes. That one thousand copies be published for the use of the Senate, at as early a period as practicable, and the Secretary of the Senate is hereby authorized to contract for the publication thereof, and to defray the expenses out of the contingent fund.

The Senate then adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, March 30, 1853.

DEATH OF MRS. FILLMORE.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, I wish to make a motion which I hope will receive the favorable consideration of the Senate. Intelligence has been received here of the death of Mrs. Fillmore, wife of Millard Fillmore, late President of the United States. She died this morning. As a mark of respect, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to, and The Senate adjourned.

THURSDAY, March 31, 1853.

Prayer by the Rev. J. G. BUTLER.

On the motion of Mr. GWIN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein the doors were reopened.

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

Mr. HAMLIN submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to contract with John C. Rives for a number of copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, equal to thirty-seven copies to each Senator, in addition to the number of copies now received by them; and that the price per copy shall not exceed the sum paid under the existing contract.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to submit a resolution, for the purpose of asking its adoption now, that the Senate will adjourn on Saturday next.

Several SENATORS. Of this week?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes; I am perfectly satisfied if we do not adjourn then that we shall be left without a quorum.

Mr. MASON. If that resolution is offered, I shall object to its consideration. I will state to the Senate that I wrote a note to the President this morning, asking him if he could, for the convenience of Senators, inform me when we could probably be adjourned. I received for answer that he thought he could probably get through a great share of the public business on which he would desire our action now, by Wednesday or Thursday of next week. As to a quorum, we had forty-two Senators here the day before yesterday, and I suppose there are at least forty now in the city.

Several SENATORS. And there are some coming back.

Mr. MASON. I think, with all respect to the honorable Senator from Texas, that it would not be altogether courteous to the President, under these circumstances, to adopt such a resolution.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am sorry that I cannot concur with the Senator from Virginia. If we do not adjourn by Saturday, I shall certainly go home. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That unless the President of the United States shall have further communications to make, the Senate will adjourn on Saturday next.

Mr. MASON. Let it lie over.

NANTUCKET LIGHT-HOUSE REPORT.

Mr. HAMLIN submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That one hundred copies of the report of the Secretary of War, with the report of Major Bache, relative to the light-house structure on New South Shoals, off Nantucket, heretofore ordered to be printed for the Senate, be printed for Major Bache.

MESSENGER TO THE SENATE.

Mr. BADGER submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be authorized to employ Preston Starritt, as messenger, from the first day of April, and that during the recess he shall, under the direction of the Sergeant-at-Arms, take care of the Senate committee rooms, and perform such other duties as may be assigned to him.

PATENT OFFICE BUILDING.

Mr. HOUSTON submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, instructed to furnish the Senate with a report of an examination, on file in the Department of the Interior, made of the Patent Office building in 1851, under the direction of the Commissioner of Public Buildings.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, the Senate adjourned.

FRIDAY, April 1, 1853.

Prayer by the Rev. J. G. BUTLER.

Mr. MASON. I desire to withdraw the memorial of Francis W. Rice, late American Consul at Acapulco, and the documents accompanying it, relative to outrages committed upon him and other American citizens by the Mexican authorities. In asking leave to withdraw these papers, I wish to say that the memorial was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations at the last session, but it was at a very late day and it was impossible for the committee to act upon it. I have since examined it together with a communication from the President, communicating information relative to the same subject. It manifestly appears that very great and cruel oppression was exercised by the Mexican authorities at Acapulco on the person of this consul. He was treated with indignity and eventually imprisoned; and so far as we are informed no redress was obtained by the Government of the United States. The consul, as he informs me, desires to lay his memorial before the present Administration, with the view to obtain the redress which it is manifest from the papers is due to him and to this Government. I ask leave to withdraw the papers.

Leave was granted.

UNITED STATES BONDS ABROAD.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I desire to lay upon the table the following resolution, which I will call up in a day or two:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be required to procure, so far as practicable, and furnish the same to the Senate at the commencement of the next session of Congress, the following information, to wit:

The aggregate amount of Federal, State, city, county, railroad, canal, and other corporation bonds, stocks, or other evidences of debt, held in Europe and other foreign countries, on the 30th June, 1853, specifying separately, so far as the same can be ascertained, the amount of each of the above description of bonds and stocks.

CLERKS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHIELDS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate pay such clerks of committees as have been employed during this extra session, the usual compensation for the time they may be so employed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after about four hours and a half spent therein, the doors were reopened,

And the Senate adjourned until Monday.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. GWIN. I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments for the purpose of making a personal explanation in regard to what is published in one of the newspapers of this city as part of the report of the Committee on Frauds, &c. It is in reference to a statement made by a late Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Hale] during the last session of Congress, in which he alleged that individuals outside of Congress had procured the passage of the law giving additional compensation to officers, seamen, and marines serving on the Pacific coast. When the Senator from New Hampshire made the statement—speaking for the Senate and the Naval Committee, to which the subject had been referred at an early period of the last Congress—I pronounced it false, because I knew it was false. I stated at the same time that the subject had been considered in committee at an early period of the first session of the last Congress, and the committee were unanimous in favor of granting the additional compensation, and I will now prove this fact by reading to the Senate the bill I reported on the 24th of February, 1852, six months before the naval appropriation bill was considered in that committee:

"That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to allow to the officers, petty officers, seamen, and marines of the United States Navy who served in the Pacific ocean, on the coast of California and Mexico, during the late war with Mexico, such additional compensation as shall be equivalent to the amount of pay accruing to such officers, petty officers, seamen, and marines during the period aforesaid."

This, Mr. President, was the deliberate action of the committee more than six months before the clause in the appropriation bill covering the same object was acted on in committee or in the Senate. One of the members of the committee [Mr. Stockton] had served on the coast of California; he had commanded the seamen and marines there who aided in the conquest of the country. A large portion of them were my constituents, and that distinguished Senator and myself took a special interest in the matter; and no person ever did approach us on the subject, directly or indirectly, nor, as I believe, any member of the committee. We considered that it was our duty to give this additional compensation to these gallant men, and we needed no prompting to induce us to perform that duty. Subsequently it was determined in committee, as there was a doubt if the bill passed the Senate whether it would be acted on in the other House, that an amendment should be offered to the naval appropriation bill whereby the officers, seamen, and marines who served on the coast of California would be placed on the same footing with the officers and soldiers of the army in service in California and Oregon by the act of 1850. Under the instructions of the committee, I did move the following amendment, which passed, but a single member of the Senate objecting to it:

"That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to allow and pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the officers, petty officers, seamen, and marines of the United States Navy, and officers and men of the revenue service, who served in the Pacific ocean, on the coast of California and Mexico, during the late war with Mexico, and since that period, the same increased or additional compensation as has been by law directed to be paid to the officers and soldiers of the army who served in California."

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. Hunter] objected to it, but said that he was "willing to give to them the additional pay, by taking the provision as it came from the House." I then read the clause in the Army appropriation bill of 1850, in these words:

"For extra pay to the commissioned officers and enlisted men of the army of the United States serving in Oregon or California, $325,854, on the following basis, to wit: that there shall be allowed to each commissioned officer as aforesaid, whilst serving as aforesaid, a per diem, in addition to their regular pay and allowance of two dollars each; and to each enlisted man as aforesaid, whilst serving as aforesaid, a per diem, in addition to their present pay and allowances, equal to the pay proper of each as established by existing laws, said extra pay of the enlisted men to be retained until honorably discharged. This additional pay to continue until the 1st of March, 1852, or until otherwise provided."

The Senator from Virginia then said:

"I am willing to add the fifty per centum which we agreed to in relation to the Army. I have no idea that the House will agree to it."

This was the only opposition the proposition met with in the Senate.

The Committee on Naval Affairs acted on this subject in February, 1852, when I reported the bill, a section of which I have read; which was, with a slight modification, to make it more acceptable to the House of Representatives, incorporated in the amendment to the naval appropriation bill; and therefore my statement in reply to the insinuation of the Senator from New Hampshire was strictly correct, that no outside influence induced the committee to act upon that matter.

My remarks were made without having the slightest intimation that any particular individual was implicated in the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire, for I had paid no attention to what he was saying until I was warned that he was attacking the Naval Committee. Subsequently I was called on by Mr. J. Knox Walker, and informed that he was the person alluded to by the Senator from New Hampshire. I recollected that he had exhibited some activity in regard to the amendment to the naval appropriation bill, but not by way of influencing the opinions of members of the committee, for those opinions had been known to the Senate month's before, on the bill which I have read. As to the particular wording of the amendment, or who drafted it, I was indifferent, if it covered the object of the committee. I had no especial recollection of Mr. Walker's action in the matter; and as he had prepared a statement of the facts which he had or said he was ready to verify by his affidavit, I indorsed its correctness, believing him to be a gentleman of veracity. This had not the slightest reference to the action of the committee, which had been matured more than six months before.

The report of the Select Committee on Frauds says that I explained the "discrepancy" in my statements, by saying that I supposed, at the time when Mr. Hale made his remarks, that he alluded to another bill. The report of the committee does not state the facts correctly. There was no discrepancy in what I said in reply to Mr. Hale, and my indorsement of Mr. Walker's statement. The committee had acted upon the subject months before Mr. Walker pretends that he had any intercourse with any member of it in reference to the matter. We reported a bill, which was on our calendar. Did he cause us to report that bill? Did he ever approach a member of the committee when we were deliberating on the subject? It is not pretended that he did. We subsequently incorporated the substance of our bill in an amendment to the naval appropriation bill. In the action of Congress on this question at that period, in his statement he says he did take an active part, not to influence the Senate or its Naval Committee, for both were in favor of giving the increased compensation; but his labors seem to have been directed to the House of Representatives and the Committee of Conference. Neither he nor any other man ever induced the Naval Committee of the Senate, or any member of it, to adopt the principle that this additional compensation should be paid to the officers and seamen and marines who served on the Pacific coast.

I merely make this statement that it may go upon the record, to show that there is no discrepancy in anything that I said on the subject.

UNITED STATES BONDS ABROAD.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by Mr. Brodhead on Friday last:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be required to procure, so far as practicable, and furnish the same to the Senate at the commencement of the next session of Congress, the following information, to wit:

"The aggregate amount of Federal, State, city, county, railroad, canal, and other corporation bonds, stocks, or other evidences of debt, held in Europe and other foreign countries, on the 30th June, 1853, specifying separately, so far as the same can be ascertained, the amount of each of the above description of bonds and stocks."

Mr. BRODHEAD. The information sought to be obtained by this resolution is important, and will be useful not only to the country, but to the Senate, in considering measures which may and probably will be brought forward at the next session proposing a revision of our revenue laws. It can be obtained with some degree of accuracy by circulars addressed by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Governors of States, presidents of railroad and canal companies, executive officers of cities, and other municipal corporations, &c. The Federal and State indebtedness abroad can be ascertained with absolute certainty.

Notwithstanding the large importation of California gold, which I fear has done considerable to increase avarice and banish industry, we have contracted a large foreign debt, which is increasing with a fearful ratio of rapidity. The Legislatures of nearly all the States in the Union seem to be devising ways and means to get in debt. Many people and legislators seem to think the world can be legislated into the millennium, and wealth acquired by going in debt. I know this is a fast age, but I regret to see so many people endeavoring to get rich without industry, economy, or frugality—the life-giving principles of a Republic. In view of the speculating spirit of the country and the number of State and corporation bonds sold in Europe, it seems impossible to have anything like stability in our revenue laws. It seems to be impossible to make tariff laws which will stand against the ways of Providence, the course of commerce and trade, and the influence of a speculating mania. What is protection one year is none the next, and what is a revenue standard one year is none the next. I hope, therefore, in view of these and other considerations, that all will hereafter agree to take the subject out of the arena of party politics.

Mr. President, I have collected some statistics, and made some estimates, which I will proceed briefly to exhibit to the Senate, for the purpose of showing our commercial and monetary relations with foreign countries, and the propriety of adopting the resolution under consideration.

The value of imports into the United States during the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1852, was.....	$207,109,738
The value of exports was.....	166,967,490
Difference against United States..	$40.142.948

The above are predicated on the official returns of the custom-houses, but they are of course only approximations to the facts of the case, as there are several deficient elements to insure their accuracy.

The imports, for instance, are based on the invoices produced on entry at the custom-houses, and on which duty was levied, and therefore no allowance is made for frauds in undervalued invoices. What this item may amount to it is impossible to say, but I should think ten per cent. on the aggregate declared value would be a reasonable estimate. Nor does the above value of foreign imports embrace the actual smuggling of foreign fabrics, which on our lake and Mexican frontiers, and on the numerous rivers and bays on the Atlantic board, must be very considerable, and probably in the aggregate may amount to four or five millions of dollars.

On the other side, the value of our exports is the cost at the shipping ports, and does not embrace the increased value which foreigners pay us for them delivered in their ports, which increased value consists of the freight so far as the merchandise has been conveyed in American vessels, insurance, profits, &c. It is, of course, impossible to arrive at anything like a correct estimate on the above points; but, after a good deal of examination and reflection on the subject, I have come to the conclusion that these uncertain items, connected with the imports and exports of the country, probably about balance each other, or, in other words, that the undervaluation of foreign invoices and the value of smuggled goods may be about an equal offset to the difference between the home valuation of our exports and the value which foreigners pay us for the latter delivered at their ports, with the addition of freight, insurance, profit, &c. On this basis, therefore, though the figures given by the custom-house returns may not be correct, yet the result is about the truth, and the real balance against us in our foreign trade for the last fiscal year may be stated at the above sum, or, in round numbers, say $40,000,000; for which we have provided by shipments of specie, or by the transfer and sale of stocks. The balance certainly cannot be less than the sum I have named, because many of our exported articles are taken in foreign vessels on foreign account.

But this by no means exhibits the full balance that has been accumulated against us by foreigners during the last fiscal year.

Our best informed citizens, and those most conversant with the subject, estimate our present indebtedness to foreigners, principally to Europe, in the shape of Federal, State, city, county, railroad, canal, and other corporation bonds and stocks, is, in the aggregate, not less than $300,000,000, which, at an interest of six per cent., would give an additional annual amount of $18,000,000 to be provided for.

The expenditure of our citizens traveling in Europe has been estimated at as high as ten millions annually; but though this class of citizens are among the most wealthy, and make a lavish expenditure abroad, I think this amount is overestimated, and that five millions would be nearer the mark, and certainly does not exceed the actual outlay for that item.

The maintenance of the navy on foreign stations, and the diplomatic expenditures, amount to about three millions more. The payment of the indemnity to Mexico under the treaty of peace has for the last few years involved an annual foreign expenditure of three millions more; but, the last of this indemnity having been paid, no future outlay on that score will be required.

The remittances by our Irish immigrants to their friends in Ireland involve an amount which makes it an item of national importance. A late English paper states that the receipts from this source are equal to the whole of the poor rates of Ireland. There are large and wealthy firms in our sea-ports who make it a principal part of their business to furnish such parties with small bills of exchange, of from £1 to £5 sterling, for which they charge an extra rate, and realize a heavy profit. The remittances under this head will, at a very low estimate, be at least five millions of dollars per annum. Something considerable is also sent out by German and other immigrants.

Against all these items of unrecorded outgoings, I know nothing incoming, except what money may be brought by immigrants, which probably may be estimated at ten millions of dollars per annum.

The account current, then, of the United States for the last fiscal year with foreign countries will stand as follows:

Excess of imports over the exports of the country	$40,000,000
Interest annually payable to foreigners on the stocks, &c., held by them	18,000,000
Expenditures of travelers	5,000,000
Navy and diplomacy	3,000,000
Installment to Mexico	3,000,000
Remittances to Ireland	5,000,000
Total	$74,000,000
From this deduct the probable amount of gold and silver brought into the country by immigrants	10,000,000
Leaving the sum of	$64,000,000

as the balance against the United States, toward the settlement of which we have the official record of the exportation above the importations of $37,000,000 of gold and silver, and the balance of $27,000,000 has no doubt been liquidated by the remittance of Federal, State, and other stocks.

From present appearances, the probable balance of the current year will not be less, and is likely to be even more, which will make a further drain upon our gold and silver, and add a further amount to our foreign indebtedness by additional transmissions of stock, thus heaping up the European mortgage upon the future labor and earnings of the country. The prospect is anything but agreeable to contemplate. No wise or prudent man would, in my judgment, thus go in debt; nor do I think it sound policy or the true path of duty for a nation to do it. I think I see in this state of things, some of the symptoms, although not all, which preceded the break-down of 1840. For the reasons which I have stated, I hope the Senate will adopt the resolution.

Mr. SEWARD. Not only shall I vote cheerfully for the resolution which has been submitted by the Senator, but I also thank him for introducing it. It will bring before the Senate and the country information which will be useful and may become even absolutely necessary. But, at the same time, lest by doing so I might be understood as in some way concurring in the rather somber views which he has taken, I wish barely to say that I do not see in the present state of our affairs anything to excite the apprehension of a speedy commercial revulsion. I know that commercial revulsions must come; and I know that all the circumstances of great commercial prosperity are to be regarded as frequently indicating the approach of a period of decline and disaster.

But I think there is a mis-estimate in the statistics which the honorable Senator has furnished, the correction of which will go far to remove the apprehensions which he has expressed. The item that he sets down in his statistics of the coin brought into this country by immigrants I think is underestimated. If I recollect aright, the number of immigrants to this country has now passed beyond four hundred thousand, and is tending towards five hundred thousand per annum. The little acquaintance I have with the subject has convinced me that the amount of gold and silver brought by these immigrants is much larger than he makes it. The increase of population by immigration is crowding close upon the native increase. In the statistics which he has read he has not made allowance for the profits which are made by our own merchants upon the importation of this great amount. There is another item which I think should be taken into the calculation. At the expiration of an average period of five or six years, all these immigrants become producers—chiefly agricultural producers in the great West; and they, with their children and their children's children, are constantly increasing the wealth of the country in a geometrical ratio. There is another point which goes to dissipate any apprehension of a speedy revulsion, and that is, that the amount of gold that we can export is an amount within certain limits subject to our own power of increase. We export now what is wanted. We export no more because Europe wants no more. She will take no more. But if there comes a return of American credits or stocks, or other forms of remittances, the increased amount which we shall send will supply that which comes back upon us. If it is said that that will be a drain from our own country of gold, I answer that the increased demand for gold there and here will be attended by increased facilities to transport to the mines the laborers and the capital which will be necessary to increase the supply of gold. With that will come a reduction of the cost of mining, and an increase of the amount produced.

These circumstances, which stand out prominently upon the first view, incline me to believe that for the present there is no serious ground of apprehension. If the remarks of the honorable Senator had gone abroad without being accompanied by some adverse explanation, there might have been a misapprehension excited in the public mind. At the same time, as I stated before, I shall cheerfully support the resolution; for I agree entirely with him, that, instead of sending paper to England, we had better send gold; and instead of sending either, we had better send whatever we can produce by cultivating the soil or by manufacturing its products.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I did not wish to be understood as expressing the opinion in the few remarks which I submitted, that anything like a commercial revulsion was to be apprehended. It was with a view to prevent such a revulsion either in the proximate future or at some distant day, that I thought it necessary to bring to the notice of the Senate and the country, the facts which I have submitted. I think it proper that we should look the truth in the face, and not proceed in the manner we did prior to 1840, in selling so many railroad and other corporation and State stocks.

The resolution was agreed to.

NANTUCKET LIGHT-HOUSE REPORT.

The following resolution, submitted by Mr. HAMLIN on the 31st ultimo, was considered and agreed to:

"Resolved, That one hundred copies of the report of the Secretary of War, with the report of Major Bache, relative to the light-house structure on New South Shoals, off Nantucket, heretofore ordered to be printed for the Senate, be printed for Major Bache."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MASON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. SHIELDS. I hope my friend from Virginia will withdraw that motion for a moment. I promised the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] if he was not here this morning, to call up a resolution which he submitted a few days ago.

Mr. MASON. What is it?

Mr. BRIGHT. I suppose it is the resolution in relation to the employment of an additional messenger.

Mr. MASON. I insist on my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

TUESDAY, April 5, 1853.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That Daniel Knipps and Lewis Ralston have leave to withdraw their papers from the files of the Senate.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, it was Ordered, That Maria C. J. Johnson, David W. Alexander, and H. P. Dorsey, have leave to withdraw their papers from the files of the Senate.

SENATE DEBATES.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by Mr. HAMLIN on the 31st ultimo:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to contract with John C. Rives for a number of copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, equal to thirty-seven copies to each Senator, in addition to the number of copies now received by them; and that the price per copy shall not exceed the sum paid under the existing contract."

Mr. GWIN. I offer the following as a substitute for the resolution; to strike out all after the word "resolved," and insert:

That the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to contract with John C. Rives for a number of copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix equal to thirty-seven copies to each Senator, and that the price per copy shall not exceed the sum now paid.

Resolved, That the Secretary be also authorized to enter into a contract with the editors of the Union and Intelligencer to publish in their respective papers from the commencement of the next session, the revised debates of the Senate, at the rate of seven dollars per column, and to revoke any existing contracts with the editors of the said two papers for reporting and publishing said debates: Provided, however, That the editors of the Intelligencer be paid seven dollars and fifty cents per column for the debates and proceedings of the Thirty-second Congress, published and to be published in said paper.

My object is to have these debates published in papers that have some circulation. The reports that have been published in the Intelligencer during the last Congress have been very accurate, and although concise they have contained the substance of the proceedings of the two Houses of Congress, certainly of the Senate, and their insertion has prevented profitable advertisements that would otherwise have been inserted. I hope the proposition will be agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I hope this resolution will be informally passed over for the present. My colleague, [Mr. BORLAND,] who I observe is not now in his seat, takes an interest in the subject, and wishes to discuss it, as he is one of the members of the Committee on Printing. I am satisfied that he will be here; and I hope, therefore, the resolution will be informally passed over.

It was passed over.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

PRINTING OF A REPORT ON COMMERCE.

When the doors were reopened the Senate was engaged in the consideration of a resolution reported by Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which a resolution had been referred directing it to report whether the compensation and expenses of the agent employed to procure and compile the information called for by the resolution of the Senate of March 8, 1851, is payable out of the appropriation for the contingent expenses of the Senate, and if not, how the same should be paid. The resolution reported from the committee is as follows:

Resolved, That the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, and that it be referred to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would inquire if the Secretary of the Treasury would, under the resolution, be authorized to make any payment? What appropriation is there out of which it could be made?

Mr. BRIGHT. The appropriation asked for is for services in collecting statistical information under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. The committee have come to the conclusion that if the contingent fund provided for his Department cannot be applied to the purpose, certainly the contingent fund of the Senate ought not to be applied to the payment of this claim, amounting as it does to $12,000. It should be provided for properly, in an appropriation bill, under the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Committee on Contingent Expenses could not consent that such a claim, and one of such size, should be paid out of our contingent fund.

Mr. HAMLIN. I know something about this matter, and I agree fully with the Senator from Indiana, that it is a case in which an estimate should have been furnished by the Department, and there should have been an appropriation made for it in a regular appropriation bill. I think there was an estimate, or something resembling one, furnished to the chairman of the Committee on Finance, at a late hour of the last session—so late an hour that he was not able to give it that investigation which it demanded, and no appropriation was made. Mr. Andrews has collected a mass of facts which will be valuable to the country in its commercial relations. He has presented a statement of the commerce of the surrounding colonies and the domestic commerce of some portions of this country, together with a statement of the productions of some of the southern sections of the country, which will render his work very valuable; and it is clearly right that he should receive his pay. He was employed by the late Secretary of the Treasury. I have no objection to his being paid out of the contingent fund of the Treasury Department. I think it would be somewhat more proper; but inasmuch as it was purely an oversight that an appropriation was not made for it, and as the Senate has taken the document and printed it, I think we should pay some portion of the expense out of the contingent fund which could be reimbursed at another session. However, if the payment can be made in the way suggested by the report of the committee, I have no objection; but I would much rather pay a portion of the claim out of the contingent fund than allow the man to go unpaid entirely.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I agree with the Senator from Maine, that the work is a valuable one. I think, however, that this is not a charge that ought to be made on, and not one cent should be paid out of our contingent fund. If we establish the precedent it will add very greatly to the embarrassments which are now occasioned by calls upon that fund, and originate claims the extent of which we cannot foresee. Another reason why we should not pay it out of the contingent fund is, that the committee has not investigated it. Having decided primarily that it was not proper to be paid out of the contingent fund, we did not investigate it all, and are, therefore, not able to pronounce what the amount ought to be, or what portion of it the Senate should pay. The work was done entirely under the direction of the Treasury Department. The instructions issued from it. The report was made to it, and it is therefore proper that it should be paid for there and not here. It should, in my judgment, be provided for by an appropriation at the next session of Congress.

Mr. BRIGHT. The resolution under which the services were performed was introduced into the Senate by the late Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE,] and was adopted on the 8th of March, 1851, and is as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to communicate to the Senate as early as possible at the next session, full and complete statements of the trade and commerce of the British North American Colonies with the United States and other parts of the world, inland and by sea, for the years 1850 and 1851, with such other information as can be procured of the trade of the great lakes."

That shows clearly that the work should be paid for either out of the contingent fund of the Treasury Department, or by an appropriation specially made for the purpose. It is evident to my mind that it should be paid by an appropriation from the Treasury, for the reason that the account, as any one will see by referring to it, is made up of various sums, such as postages and miscellaneous items generally; and referring it to the Committee on Contingent Expenses would be nothing more nor less than giving them power to pass a law authorizing the payment of the several items. But the Senate is already aware that there is some prejudice existing in consequence of the amount of expenditures from our contingent fund, which has gone up to an amount over $300,000 per annum. The object of the committee is to rule out every claim which is not legitimate and proper to be paid out of that fund; and this is clearly such a claim.

The question was taken on the resolution, and it was agreed to.

OPEN EXECUTIVE SESSIONS.

Mr. CHASE submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That all sessions and all proceedings of the Senate shall be public and open, except when matters communicated in confidence by the President, shall be received and considered, and in such other cases as the Senate by resolution from time to time shall specially order; and so much of the 38th, 39th, and 40th rules as may be inconsistent with this rule is hereby rescinded.

CHARGES AGAINST GOVERNOR RAMSAY.

Mr. SEBASTIAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to cause to be investigated the charges of fraud and misconduct in office alleged against Alexander Ramsay, Superintendent of Indian Affairs in Minnesota, and which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs by a resolution of the 10th January last, and to report the results of such investigation to the Senate at the next session of Congress, and that the record of the proceedings of said committee under said resolution be referred to the President, and be subject to such order as he may make therein.

THE MEXICAN BOUNDARY.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by Mr. HOUSTON on the 30th ultimo:

"Resolved, That John R. Bartlett, late Commissioner, and A. B. Gray, late United States Surveyor of the Mexican Boundary, be authorized to furnish a report and plans to the Senate of the explorations made by them and by others connected with the Commission under them, on the topography, geography, and natural history of the regions adjacent to the line, with such information as was collected relative to the Indian tribes through Texas, California, and New Mexico; and that the work be executed under the supervision of the Department of the Interior in a style and form corresponding with the publication of "The History, Condition, and Prospects of the Indian Tribes" of H. R. Schoolcraft, now in course of publication, and Owen's Report on the Geology of Lake Superior: Provided, That the same shall not exceed two volumes: That one thousand copies be published for the use of the Senate, at as early a period as practicable, and the Secretary of the Senate is hereby authorized to contract for the publication thereof, and to defray the expenses out of the contingent fund."

Mr. HUNTER. This is an important matter. I hope we shall not go into it now. There is no pressing necessity for doing so. It is a proposition to print another very expensive book. I do not know how far it comes in conflict with the provision of the deficiency bill passed at the last session in regard to the distribution of books. I should like to look to that. I hope it will be laid over, and I will look into it by to-morrow.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not know that the expense is a matter of any great importance if the information is important, as I think it is. The gentlemen referred to in the resolution are both scientific men. They have had a long time to make their observations. They have had an opportunity of digesting and putting them in the best form for presentation to the world. I think that the character of the information proposed is as important as any that can come before the Senate, and there is no other opportunity of obtaining it. The American people are interested in it; and if some expense shall be the consequence of it, I do not see that that is any particular objection to it. I hope the resolution will be adopted. I would not call for the information unless I believed it of importance, and unless I was convinced that there was no other way of obtaining it. If there is another way of obtaining it, and gentlemen are satisfied that it can be obtained in a better way, I will accede to anything they propose. But if there is no other plan proposed, I shall certainly insist upon this plan, on the ground that the information is important, needful, and necessary.

Mr. BORLAND. I would suggest that we should pursue the plan in this case which is usually pursued. I believe a person engaged in an exploration is to report to the Department, and if the Department, upon examining the report, deems it of public interest and value, it can be sent to either House of Congress with a recommendation for its publication, and the mode in which it is to be published can then be determined. That I think is the usual mode; and it would be better for us to pursue that mode in this case; for when we come to look at the expense which this work will involve, and our experience in publishing books of this kind, we will find that the contingent fund of the Senate would not be one fourth large enough to publish it. The cost of the publication alone of the work of Schoolcraft, to which the resolution refers, was something like $100,000. We have got three volumes, and they have not cost less than that amount. And Dr. Owen's book, which is a very valuable one, I think cost over $30,000, and it is perhaps the cheapest book ever published by Congress. It was published under the supervision of the General Land Office, and Dr. Owen has been permitted to supervise it and make all the contracts; and to my astonishment he has reduced the cost to less than four dollars per volume, as he informs me; but he has done it by pursuing a course which nobody else has ever done He has gone in person to examine the engraving establishments, so as to procure the engravings and wood-cuts on the best terms, and in the best manner, and made contracts lower than anybody else has ever done. Then if we look at the publication of Mr. Wilkes's book, which has been in progress for some ten or twelve years—I say look at the cost, not at the book, for I believe very few have an opportunity to see the work at all—we have been paying $25,000 or $30,000 for that. I mention this, I wish the Senator from Maryland to understand, not to assail the work or its character, but as an instance of the expense of publication. It will, however, be understood that these have been in the form of reports made, and then it has been a matter of discretion with the Departments and with Congress as to the mode of publication. I think that will be the better course to pursue in this case.

Mr. PEARCE. I think this resolution had better not be passed now. The Commission on the Mexican Boundary has not yet closed its labors, and a large amount of information can probably be obtained which has not yet been reported; and I suppose a large amount will be included in the report of the Commission. I think it better in every point of view to get all the information we can, if we are to make the publication, and that therefore it will be better to postpone it until the whole survey shall be completed. We shall then have the labors of all the different officers together with the probable amount of the expense of the publication, and shall be enabled to act with more light upon the subject. I therefore think it inexpedient to act now.

Mr. BRIGHT. Before I vote upon the resolution, I should like to know from the honorable Senator from California, [Mr. WELLER,] who was formerly the Commissioner on the Boundary, whether he has not in contemplation for publication a work also? I should not like to give a vote in conflict with his wishes, and I therefore should like to hear from him. [Laughter.]

Mr. MASON. I agree entirely with the suggestions made by the Senator from Arkansas in regard to the plan adopted for the publication of works of this description. We should at least have some notice in advance of what is to be published. Now, the Commissioner and the Surveyor on the Boundary Commission were responsible to the Department of the Interior, and it was their duty to make a report to that Department of all the official matters committed to their charge. The duty prescribed by law was simply to run and mark the boundary line between the United States and Mexico; but I see by the instructions from the Department, which perhaps were very proper, they were instructed further to make as far as they could an examination of the natural history of the country, its productions, &c. How far those gentlemen were competent for the discharge of this incidental duty, is a matter which I would be very sorry in my place in the Senate to determine, unless the work is first submitted to us, and we have some information about it. As has been said, and properly said, by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PEARCE,] this work is unfinished; and the action that has been taken on the work of the late Commissioner is of a character, I should think, very little to recommend it to the confidence of the Senate. We were obliged to withhold the appropriation for the continuance of the Commission because, in the judgment of the Senate, the Commissioner had departed from his proper duties in fixing the boundary line; and I am informed from an official source, since that Commission has been broken down and returned home, that the Surveyor, Mr. Emory, who was there conducting the survey, never had the pleasure of an interview with the Commissioner during the whole time he held office—more than twelve months. He was in the line of his duty prosecuting the survey while the Commissioner was, God knows where, exploring I suppose the interior of Mexico and finding the materials for this work. I want information on all these subjects before I can sanction anything done by that gentleman. I do not mean to prejudge him. I have no information to enable me to do it. But let him make his report to the Department of the Interior, and then if the work is of sufficient merit, after bringing it along side of, and collating it with the works of his predecessor and successor, let them be published as a whole; but I should regret extremely to take any step now to publish it when I do not know what it is.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the remarks of the honorable Senator from Virginia strengthens the position which I have taken. He says that the Commissioner was absent from the particular duty of running the line God knows where in Mexico I have no doubt in the world that he has collected and collated some very interesting facts which will make a very interesting work, if we had all the minutiæ which he would be enabled to give. It appears to me that it more strongly urges the resolution than what I had said before. I think it very important that we should have it.

Mr. MASON. I will ask the honorable Senator a question. The resolution requires the officers to report to the Senate. Now, I will ask the Senator if he has any information why the officers have not reported to the Department of the Interior?

Mr. HOUSTON. It is understood that the Department of the Interior is supposed to suppress very important facts, and not give them to the world. I want those facts. They relate principally to the section of country which I in part represent. They relate to the entire country between Texas and California. They are very important to the region of country, and not only to that region, but to the whole country. It is important to obtain the information which otherwise may be suppressed for years, and not brought forth to the world. I have reason to believe that the facts are very important, and that the country will be materially benefited by them; and we will better understand the subject of our future action, not only in the Senate, but in the House of Representatives; and it will be understood throughout the whole country. We are all interested in our western frontier—the country connecting California with the Atlantic coast. We are interested in all these things. For that reason, I urge the adoption of the resolution. I have no particular interest in regard to it. It seems to me to be very reasonable. We are in the habit of spending money on other subjects, and I do not see why we should not be making books, for I find a great demand for them, and I am told the demand is increasing every day. I have heard that when gentlemen have transmitted Owen's Report from here to their various localities, those reports did not get half way. They are stolen out of the mails. That proves the great value of the works, and the great anxiety of the people for intelligence, [laughter,] and urges the necessity of getting a bountiful supply of books by the Senate. I have been so well guarded, that I have ordered all that I have received to be boxed up, and it will cost me two or three thousand dollars to get them home for distribution in Texas. [Laughter.] I am not afraid of the mails being robbed there. They can be distributed there. But I cannot take the risk of mailing them here. Now, Mr. President, I insist that the vote shall be taken on the resolution.

Mr. BUTLER. We are called upon to edit a book the contents of which not one Senator here knows anything about. We are required to edit a book of geology, mineralogy, entomology, biography, astronomy—an encyclopedia containing materials furnished by whom? I want to know something of this book from some other source than Mr. Bartlett or Mr. Gray. The resolution would imply that they are the only two authors of the book; but there are others to whom credit should be given. I take the liberty of mentioning the name of one—Colonel Graham. I will answer for it that he made a larger contribution than almost any other gentleman.

A SENATOR. And Major Emory.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir, and Major Emory. Those gentlemen ought to be consulted. It seems to me entirely premature to take a book in the gross in this way without the indorsement of some literary person who has examined it. The best way, I suppose, is to edit the book, and then look at it, for that is the proposition.

One word upon these books which are so much praised. I would like to know how so many of them get into the bookstores? I would like to know how so many of the documents published by the authority of the Senate get into the bakers' shops, to wrap up the bread with? [Laughter.] How many books are sold by the pound in many shops and stores of this District? Sir, they do not even go to the mail. They leave the hands of members of Congress and go into those shops, or into the bookstores. How they get there I cannot tell; but that they are there everybody knows; whether they are purloined by some subordinate or the members of Congress are indifferent to them, and let them be distributed in that way. I suppose the honorable Senator from Texas when he spoke of the books being stolen out of the mail, did not allude to the mail that goes south, and did not suppose that they would be purloined in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, or Mississippi. I hardly know in what portion of the country through which the mail runs, there is such a literary mania. It may be on the road to Texas itself. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I certainly intended to cast no reflection on Carolina, North or South, but I do not know that their general character for literature might not justify me in representing them to have such a desire for books. [Laughter.] I certainly did not intend to impute the purloining to Carolina, because where the mails are sent in cars or steamboats they have not time or a good opportunity to purloin.

But I am furnished by the Senator from South Carolina, with an argument in favor of the resolution. He says the proposition is to print a book which not one Senator knows anything about. That is my reason for wanting the book. I want to know something about it. I cannot see that there will be any danger in printing it, under the circumstances. The surveyor, who is to assist in making the report, is one of Virginia's brightest sons in his sphere of action. He is one of the most intelligent, able, enlightened, sagacious, industrious young men that I know anywhere in the United States. He was engaged on the Maine boundary, and on the boundary line between Texas and the United States; and I am sure, in point of capacity, he has no superior in a young man of his age. In point of observation, firmness, integrity, and everything that ought to commend him to consideration, no man is more reliable, more truthful than Mr. Gray, and for these reasons I wish to see his production. I do not, to be sure, agree with Mr. Bartlett in relation to the fixing of the initial point for the running of the boundary line between Texas and Mexico, but still I would like to know his general information; and if he was peregrinating throughout Mexico, when he ought to have been engaged in something else, we shall find out the reason of his absence, and the result may be something very interesting and amusing. The report will inform us of various matters connected with Mexico, about which I would like to know something; but I am perfectly willing to submit to the decision of the Senate. I am not a great reader of books. In the reading of documents published by order of the Senate, I have confined myself pretty much to the Patent Office Report. [Laughter.] I have obtained a great deal of useful information from it—leaving out of view the mechanical branch of it, for I do not understand that. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT. The question is on postponing the further consideration of the resolution until to-morrow.

Mr. HUNTER. Since it has been taken up, I think it had better be disposed of. I believe that this habit of printing books for the purpose of gratifying the personal desire, of individuals or officers connected with the Government, for distinction, has led to a great deal of mischief. I am not surprised that persons should desire to obtain for nothing books printed at the public expense. The Senator from Texas says that the demand for books is increasing. Of course it is; and we shall not be able to satisfy it, if we go on in this manner printing any book which any public officer may choose to write for the purpose of placing his name favorably before the public. We not only give him an advantage over all other literary men, but we produce a demand for books which will not be satisfied, and this demand is to be met out of the contingent fund of the Senate. I ask again as I asked the other day, how long can we expect the House of Representatives to be satisfied with our separate and single control of that fund, if we saddle it with such expenses as this?

Again, as has been properly remarked by the Senator from Arkansas, and my colleague, who knows anything about this book? Has the Senator from Texas examined it? Has he read it? Does he know anything of the materials which compose it? Have we any opinion passed upon it from any source upon which we can rely? Has it been examined by any Department of the Government, or by any committee of this body? Who can say what it is to cost; of how many volumes it is to consist; under whose direction it is to be executed? Are we to publish whatever Mr. Bartlett or Mr. Gray may choose to write and ask to have published at the public expense, and make a book which is likely to be so costly, as one of this sort containing costly engravings? It seems to me that this is such a proposition as has never been presented here before. We have already gone too far; and it is asking us to go further than we have ever done before. I move that the resolution lie upon the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion for a moment to let me say a few words.

Mr. HUNTER. I withdraw it.

Mr. HOUSTON. My friend from Virginia asks me if I have read the work? Sir, I desire to see it in print that I may read it. I do not like to read manuscript. [Laughter.] It ought to be printed, so that I and the Senate and the country may see it.

Mr. HUNTER. I will ask the Senator if the book has been written?

Mr. HOUSTON. The reports have been written. They are waiting the order of the Senate. They have been ready for some time. I insist that the Senator shall not move to lay the resolution on the table. He had better move to postpone it indefinitely. I have no objection to its lying over until to-morrow.

Mr. HUNTER. I desire to dispose of the resolution as it is up. We can dispose of it now, as well as to-morrow; and I hope my motion will be a test question.

Mr. HOUSTON. We may have nothing else to do to-morrow, and it will be a very profitable subject to talk upon. [Laughter.] I do not care much about the book. I am as little fond of books as anybody; but I have no doubt that this work will contain a great deal of valuable information. As to the amount of expense, I think that very inconsiderable. I do not think the book ought to be regarded in the light in which some gentlemen seem to look at it. It will be a book of great value. We are to have an interesting and important relation hereafter to the section of country to which it refers; and if it referred to no other subject than the topography of the country, and the condition of the Indians, their numbers, &c., it would be a matter of great importance.

Mr. HUNTER. I am informed by gentlemen who are likely to know, that the Senator from Texas is perhaps mistaken as to this book having been written. The report has not been written. The resolution will merely give authority to the officers to write as much as they choose. The Senator from California, who is acquainted with these matters, thinks it is not written. So does the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the Senate will postpone the resolution until to-morrow, I will ascertain that fact. If it is not written, I shall not insist upon the resolution. Unless it has been prepared as an official document in relation to this particular subject, under the instructions given to them by the Department for the prosecution of their work, I shall not insist upon it.

Mr. PEARCE. If this report is written, it has been done since the 4th of March last. I know efforts were made about that time to get hold of materials for writing it. I suppose it has hardly been prepared since that time.

Mr. HAMLIN. From what I know of this subject I am inclined to agree with the Senator from Maryland. I think that the report, or book, or whatever you call it, has not been written. I think the language of the resolution is against that. It does not speak of it as a thing completed, but it is an invitation to those two officers to prepare a report, or I choose rather to say, to write a book; and it is, in my sober judgment, for the benefit of a certain publishing house in a city not a great many miles distant from this. We have, in my judgment on many occasions, gone too far, much too far in the publication of what are really books, which did not relate to the commercial, agricultural, or manufacturing interests of the country. A scientific gentleman in the Army or Navy gets attached to some expedition and he writes a report. He makes that report to some one of the Departments—the Department under which he may have been sent out; and in that way every individual who has been desirous of publishing a book, if he could get attached to a survey of any kind, had the opportunity of publishing it at the expense of the contingent fund of the Senate. Now, sir, this resolution proposes to go one step further. There has been no report even made to the Department; but the resolution is an invitation to the two officers to prepare a report which may or may not have been collected in the proper sphere of their duties, and which is to be, if made, a book relating to various subjects specified in the resolution, but which had no legitimate connection with their duties on the survey. If we should take this step, I do not know why we should not go into any subject in science. I believe that we should dispose of this matter now. I see that Senators are desirous of going into Executive session, and as the matter has been fully discussed, I move as a test question that the resolution do lie upon the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the Senator will withdraw that for a moment.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will withdraw it if the Senator will renew it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I know nothing about the intention which may be had in regard to the publication of this work. I am satisfied from the source from which I have derived my information that it will be a valuable work, and that has induced me to offer this resolution. I am satisfied that it has no object to promote the interest of any bookseller or bookmaker; and the individual from whom it emanates is as far from doing a thing indirectly as any man in America. It was Mr. Gray, who has been suppressed in the expression of his intelligence, that suggested this; and it was for the purpose, not only of vindicating himself against the imputation of having been discharged for disobedience of orders, but for the purpose of showing on what ground he acted; the amount of information that he obtained and the labor that he performed; and at the same time that he was engaged in this during the extremest hardships, while the Department here was preparing to dishonor and disgrace him, after he had signed an instrument in violation of his conscience and his conviction of propriety; and he has never had the opportunity of showing what his conduct had been up to that time; what labor he performed, and what information he had obtained. I do not know whether Mr. Bartlett knews anything about the resolution. I, of course, did not wish to take any advantage of him. I did not wish to preclude him from the advantage of making a report also. I did not wish to bring an ex parte matter before the Senate. I wish them to have the opportunity of comparing information derived from both sources, and see whether it is worth anything; and if it is worth anything, that the whole country may be possessed of it; but if it is worthless, I would be very sorry to urge the adoption of the resolution here. I am very well satisfied, from the characters of one party, and the opportunities of the other, that it must contain, not only on one part, but on the part of both, useful information, and therefore I desire to obtain it.

Mr. BORLAND. In the remarks which I made, I did not intend to say anything about the character of this book. I know nothing of it, and of course I could say nothing as to its value or want of value. I am not acquainted with Mr. Gray, and have but a slight acquaintance with Mr. Bartlett. But I would suggest that we have during the last Congress changed our system of public printing. We have now, I think, a very good system. It is operating remarkably well. The printing is done well; and when that is the case I can see no propriety in our going abroad to have our printing done. If this be a report which has been made to the Department of the Interior, as it surely was the duty of the individuals to make it, if they had it to make—we can by a simple resolution call upon the Secretary to send it to us, and then it will be for the Senate, through its proper committee, to determine whether to print it or not; and it can be turned over under the law which now exists and be printed as a public document in the regular way, so that it will be under our control, and in my opinion, it will not cost as much as if it was published in another way.

I am satisfied that the report has not been prepared for publication. The materials are on hand out of which the gentleman proposed to make it. As to Mr. Bartlett's connection with it, I know nothing further than this: that he called upon me with a part of the manuscript which I did not have time to examine, and told me that his object was to show me a part of the materials, and expressed his solicitude for its publication. I do not know what Mr. Gray has to do with it; but Mr. Bartlett is not only cognizant of what is proposed to be done, but he is making the most pressing solicitations to have it done; and I understand that he is a book publisher; certainly it was represented at the time he was appointed Commissioner that he was a bookseller and book publisher. I take it for granted, seeing the anxiety which he exhibits to have the work printed, that he expects to have the job, because the terms of the resolution leaves it entirely discretionary with them—no committee is to have anything to do with it, but the Secretary of the Senate is to pay for it out of the contingent fund. I am satisfied, judging from our experience with other books of this sort, that the contingent fund is not one fourth large enough for it, and the payment of it, will deprive the Senate of the use of the contingent fund for any other object.

Mr. MASON. I move to postpone the further consideration of the resolution until to-morrow, for the purpose of going into Executive session.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think we had better put an end to this discussion, and I shall therefore move that the resolution lie upon the table. I will, however, make one remark before I submit the motion. It is probable that when this report shall have been made to the Senate, and a motion shall have been made to print it, and that motion shall have been referred to the Committee on Printing and received a favorable report from that committee, I may be able to go for the printing of it; but I cannot go for it without that action. I cannot do it before I know what the report is. I therefore move that the resolution lie upon the table. If they desire the report to be printed, let it be submitted to the Department, laid before the Senate, referred to the Committee on Printing, and favorably reported upon.

The motion to lay upon the table was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, April 6, 1853.

Prayer by the Rev. J. G. BUTLER.

The PRESIDENT laid before the Senate two copies of the laws of New Mexico, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DIFFICULTIES AT SAN JUAN.

Mr. SEWARD submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if in his opinion it shall be compatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate such official information as he may have received touching the recent transactions between Captain Hollins of the sloop of war Cyane and the authorities of Greytown or San Juan de Nicaragua, together with the orders and instructions which have been given to Captain Hollins in relation to the affairs at that place.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I hope the Senator will modify the resolution by striking out "Greytown or." I dislike to recognize that English name. The place was never known as Greytown, but always as San Juan, from the first discovery of the continent up to the 8th of February, 1848, when it was seized by the British, and the name changed.

Mr. SEWARD. I accept the modification.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

DEBATES IN THE SENATE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. HAMLIN in relation to the purchase of thirty-seven extra copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for each Senator, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. GWIN.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the further consideration of the subject was postponed until the first Monday in December next.

The PRESIDENT. The next resolution in order is the following, which was submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] on the 10th ultimo:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate have published in the Daily National Intelligencer, the full debates and proceedings of the Senate for the late legislative session, and pay the same compensation therefor as is allowed to the Union and Globe, and pro rata for what has been reported and published in the Intelligencer during the present Congress."

Mr. GWIN. I hope that will be postponed.

Mr. BORLAND. I think it had better be considered and disposed of. It is a proposition which in my opinion should not be agreed to, and we had better lay it on the table or reject it at once. We can have no better time to act upon it than the present.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I would be quite willing to pay the Intelligencer for the matter which has been published, and I think the resolution should be so modified. It had, therefore, perhaps better go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. BORLAND. I would suggest to my friend from Pennsylvania, that the resolution had better be disposed of now. I have a very few remarks to make upon it; and I think I can satisfy him and the Senate that we ought not to pay for what has been published. There is good reason for it. There is no reason why we should pay for publishing hereafter in that paper what has taken place which has not yet been published. If the resolution goes over at all, I should like it to go over until the next session; but if it is disposed of at this session, it had better be done now. I hope the resolution will not be taken up, but if it is under consideration, I will say in a few words what I have to say upon the subject. I shall make no speech.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the resolution will not be taken up. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas withdraw his motion to lay the resolution upon the table?

Mr. GWIN. Is the resolution before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. BORLAND. Then I will say what I have to say in a very few words. This is a proposition to pay the National Intelligencer for what it has published, during the last Congress, of the proceedings and debates of this body; and to pay also for publishing after this time that which it omitted to publish during the last Congress. I am opposed to both propositions, and for this reason: The National Intelligencer had a contract on the same terms as the Union, to publish the proceedings and debates of the Senate. Its editors came forward and relinquished that contract. I thought it was generally understood why that was done; and that which followed confirmed me in what I supposed was the general understanding. It was considered that it made the Intelligencer a neutral paper in politics to publish the debates of the Senate, because it had to publish Democratic as well as Whig speeches, which left but little room for editorials; and inasmuch as the Democrats were in a majority in the Senate, and perhaps more speeches were made on the Democratic than on the other side, it gave the paper rather a Democratic tendency by throwing Democratic doctrines before the country. The presidential election was coming on, and it was deemed important that the Intelligencer should be a thoroughly Whig paper. To make it so, and to avoid the publication of Democratic speeches in the debates of the Senate, it relinquished its contract; and we found that it afterwards confined itself almost exclusively to the publication of Whig speeches delivered here, which might be useful in the political canvass. Of course I had no objection to that. It was within the option of the editors to publish what they pleased for political purposes. But the proposition involved here is that we shall pay the editors of that paper seven dollars and fifty cents a column for doing that when they published at their own option a party paper, and relinquished the contract which required them to publish the speeches on both sides of the Chamber. I am disposed to be as liberal in party matters as most men; but it is really asking me, as a Democrat, to go further than propriety requires me to go, to comply with this proposition. I would have no objection to pay for the publication of Whig speeches, provided the Democratic speeches went along with them; but I am unwilling to give a party paper the privilege of selecting what speeches it chooses to publish for political effect, and recognize that as the regular proceedings and debates of this body, and pay for it at the public expense. I cannot do that.

The next proposition is—what? To pay the paper for going back and publishing now what we did during the last Congress.

Mr. SEWARD. The last Congress or the last session?

Mr. BORLAND. The last Congress as I understand, or if it is the last session, it is the same thing in principle.

The PRESIDENT. It is the last Congress.

Mr. BORLAND. Now I should like to know if there would be enough of public interest in the proceedings of the last Congress to lead the people to go back and read them all over again, if the newspapers should publish them subsequent to this time? It is a good policy on the part of the National Intelligencer. It threw out all these things when it wanted to occupy its columns with party matter for the purpose of affecting the presidential election. It was a very good party move; and now, when the excitement has passed away, and persons care very little about the political character and aspect of the paper, the Intelligencer, which, during the excitement that attended the presidential election, did not publish full debates, wants to publish now what nobody will read and the public do not want. Appeals have been made to me by gentlemen outside of the Chamber that the National Intelligencer cannot get along without some patronage. Very well. I like the National Intelligencer as a Whig paper; but if it cannot get along without such patronage, I am unwilling, as a Democratic Senator, to bestow it. I do not think we have any right to do it; and if we had the power, I do not think this would be the proper purpose for which, or the proper occasion upon which, to exercise it. This is my understanding of the proposition now before us; and for these reasons I shall vote against the resolution. Unless some one wishes to offer views on the other side, I move that it lie upon the table. If any gentleman wishes to say anything, I will withdraw it.

Mr. HAMLIN. I submitted the original resolution to increase the subscription for the number of the Congressional Globe and Appendix with which Senators are now furnished, upon the ground that while we expended so much money for the preparation of the debates in that form, I thought it advisable that Senators should have as many copies for distribution, or a greater number than is furnished to members of the House.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the Senator permit me to say that I concur with him fully? My remarks had no reference to his proposition.

Mr. HAMLIN. I understand. I was saying that these were the reasons which operated with me in offering the original resolution. The amendment offered by the Senator from California, I am aware, embraces other propositions than that contained in the resolution which I offered.

Mr. BORLAND. The resolution offered by the Senator in relation to the Congressional Globe and Appendix is not up for consideration.

Mr. HAMLIN. What is up? Let the resolution be read.

Mr. GWIN. I will state to the Senator that his resolution was postponed until the next session.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then I was hanging a speech in the wrong place and on the wrong subject, though I do not know but that it would apply just as well. [Laughter.] I will therefore say nothing further.

Mr. GWIN. I have a few words to say in regard to the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas. I think he is mistaken in regard to the object of the resolution. I think that the portion of the debates which is proposed to be paid for, which were published during the last session, are the running current debates which were published daily. That portion of the debates which went extensively into the questions before the Senate, is not embraced in the resolution, if I understand it. The National Intelligencer published a very accurate daily report of the proceedings of the Senate; and I acknowledge that it is important to the country that such a report should be published in that paper. It is concise, leaving out a great deal of immaterial matter which passes here; but still I thought it useful. It is for that portion, which the resolution proposes to pay the editors. What follows is the official report as made out by the Globe and Union. That is to be published hereafter. The remarks made by the Senator to the effect that in the debates published by the Intelligencer during the last session, there were more Whig speeches than Democratic, are entirely outside of the proposition. It is now proposed that the debates which have heretofore been published in the Union and the Globe, shall be republished in the Intelligencer for which it shall get so much per column. It is to publish them just as they were reported in those papers; and it is to be paid for what it had reported; that is a succinct account of the proceedings of the Senate, in which, it seems to me, there was no reference to the political discussion further than was necessary in the publication of the debates that occurred in the Senate.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Some valuable speeches were published in the Intelligencer during the last session, and published too without reference to party character. I think all the leading speeches on the important questions at the last session which were delivered on both sides of the Chamber appeared in the Intelligencer. Such is my recollection. Now, sir, in my opinion, its editors abandoned the contract, which was similar to the one under which the Union has been reporting our proceedings, because it did not pay. They had a right to do that; but in view of the fact that the succinct publication of the proceedings of the Senate has been useful, I am willing to pay them for it. I am unwilling to go back and publish all the speeches which have been made during the last session. I do not think that it was with a view to benefit the Whig party that the Intelligencer abandoned the contract which it had with the Senate for the publication of the debates at large. I differ from my friend from Arkansas on that point. The editors distinctly stated in their communication to the Senate that they asked to be released from their contract because it did not compensate them. I am therefore quite willing to pay them for what work they have done, but I am unwilling to go back and pay them for the publication now of all the speeches that were delivered during the last Congress.

Mr. MASON. The resolution in regard to an increase of the subscription for the Congressional Globe and Appendix, has been postponed until the next session. This, as I understand, is a proposition to publish the debates in the National Intelligencer. I recollect very distinctly that when our present system of publishing the debates as the expenses of the Senate originated, great doubts were generally expressed as to the propriety of such a system. There was then a contract made with the leading paper of each great political party at the seat of Government—the Union and the Intelligencer—to publish at a stated price per column, the entire debates of the Senate as fast as they were delivered. According to my impression, the contracts were complied with by both papers. They kept up the publication of the current debates, and did lay them before their readers generally the next day after they occurred—seldom later than the day after. At the close of the short session two years ago, the editors of the National Intelligencer informed the Senate that it was too onerous for that paper to continue the contract; that it did not compensate them. They therefore relinquished it, and voluntarily disconnected themselves from the Senate as one of our official reporters. Now the proposition as I understand it, is to authorize them again to publish the debates on the same terms, and pay them for what they have already published. I would have no objection, if gentlemen desire it; to continue the publication of the current debates in the Intelligencer, but I think there is no reason in the world either for ordering the publication of what has passed, or for paying them for what they have voluntarily published. That paper is one of the oldest papers at the seat of Government, and I have every reason to believe that it enjoys a most extensive general circulation not in this country only, but abroad. It is a paper conducted with great ability and it has remained for many years in very able hands. It is, as all papers in this country must be, a party paper, although it is conducted, I am free to say, with great decorum and courtesy to the opposing party. At the same time it is conducted with an exclusive eye to the interests of its party. I feel no party hostility towards it whatever. I believe that our country will not continue to be a republic, certainly not a republic in a sound and healthy condition, unless there are two parties—parties not having a tendency to degenerate into the party in power, and the party in opposition, but two parties such as constituted the dividing parties in this country half a century ago or less—parties opposed to each other upon the principles of the Government and the mode of administering it. There must be parties. No salutary influence can be exerted on the Government, unless there are parties and party organs. But I see no reason in the world for paying the National Intelligencer for what it has voluntarily published. It published it for its own purpose. It was what its readers had a right to expect, and it was necessary to sustain its own character. I would have no objection to so much of the resolution as proposes to continue the publication of the debates in that paper. What is the object of the publication? To give an opportunity to its readers throughout the country to see what is done in the Senate. We all know that the interest in the debates is lost when we go back and publish them after they have become stale. I have been a reader of the Intelligencer, I think, some thirty years, and, as I said, it has had a sedulous and exclusive eye to the interests of the party of which it is one of the organs. I cannot, however, agree with the suggestion of my friend from Arkansas, that it has been unfair or partial, at least while it was publishing the debates of the Senate for the Senate. It then published the whole of the proceedings. If it has done otherwise since, it has had a perfect right to publish what it pleased; but while it was publishing officially for the Senate, it contained speeches in extenso on both sides of the Chamber on every important topic of discussion.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not differ at all from the Senator from Virginia, about the character of the National Intelligencer as a party paper. We all know it is a very dignified one; and I believe it is one of the most candid, and has less of bitterness of feeling in it than any paper which we have. As a public journal I respect it very highly. I do not charge it with any unfairness. There was no unfairness in its publishing such speeches and documents as it thought proper to advance the interests of the Whig party. It was perfectly right in doing so. I do not object to that; nor would I have objected to continuing it as one of the reporters of the Senate while it was receiving seven dollars and fifty cents a column. I very cheerfully voted for its having the contract to that effect, and would have continued it as long as it may be the policy of the Senate to employ special papers to report its proceedings. I would not have restricted that, so far as it is considered patronage, to the papers of my own party. I would be perfectly willing that the National Intelligencer should have it; but when its editors came forward and told us that the contract did not pay, that they could no longer go on under it, and when they gave it up on the eve of a presidential canvass, and during that canvass did exercise their discretion for the benefit of their own party, and published such speeches and documents as conduced to the interests of that party, I am unwilling to pay them for such work.

It seems to me that the suggestion of my friends from Pennsylvania and Virginia proves a little too much in favor of this proposition. The editors of the Intelligencer told you that they gave the contract up because it would not pay. They thought it was a bad bargain. They could not go on with it, and yet they come forward now and ask us to enter into it again. If they lost money on the contract the year before last, why should it not make them lose money now? No, sir, the object was this: I understand the contract did not pay because the pecuniary compensation was not sufficient to compensate for the political injury that it might sustain by publishing all the debates; and it was a question between the pecuniary and the political interests of the paper. The money was not enough to induce them at a time of high party excitement to publish what they and the friends of the paper called at that time a neutral paper. They wanted a Whig paper; but the publication of Democratic speeches in it made it a neutral paper, because they neutralized the effect of the editorials and of Whig speeches. I differ from Senators who say that it has published speeches on both sides. I have read it pretty carefully, and if it published Democratic speeches I did not see them in its columns. It may as a special favor have published one or two, but that it made a practice of it, I am very sure is not the case.

Mr. President, I think our present system of reporting is wrong in itself. It might be greatly improved. In my opinion, we ought to have one official reporter whom we ought to pay more than we now pay, to enable him to organize and keep up one efficient corps of reporters; and then if we desired to have the reports published in other papers, we could pay those papers for their republication from the official paper. We have now going out to the public two sets of reports of our proceedings as official reports, which very often differ from each other. I want the thing uniform. I think we can have it better done by paying one official reporter, and having one uniform report to go out as the official record, and then we can, by paying a smaller compensation to other papers, have it distributed over the country as we think proper. I think that would be the better plan to pursue.

Mr. SEWARD. I perceive that this resolution is misapprehended in its effect and scope. It does not propose that the National Intelligencer shall go back and publish the proceedings of the last Congress, and receive compensation for it. What it does precisely propose is this: The National Intelligencer during the last Congress, reported what may be called eclectic debates on its own account. It is now proposed to pay its editors for those eclectic debates, and no more; and in regard to the last session to pay them for what they have already published, and to authorize them to publish the residue of the debates of that session, not of the last Congress. That is the point to which I wish to direct the attention of Senators.

Mr. BORLAND. If the Senator will let the resolution be read, he will see that it refers to the last Congress.

Mr. SEWARD. Let it be read. I think the honorable Senator will see that I am right.

The resolution was read.

Mr. SEWARD. Very well. Now, then, the question divides itself into two parts. First, in regard to the last session. I think it cannot be alleged that there has been any political influence exercised in the selection of the eclectic debates which were published during that session, and I see no reason why we should not be willing to pay them for those debates. There have been no political debates here during the last session; nothing that has had any tendency whatever to operate in a partisan point of view upon the public mind; and if there was, the debates which have been published have certainly been fair and equal. The Intelligencer, if it should go on now and publish the residue of the debates of the last session, will give them to the public nearly as soon as they will reach the public through the Union, which I believe is not yet through its report of the last session, and certainly as soon as the public will be reached by the debates in the Congressional Globe, and sooner too. Therefore, as the Senate might perhaps agree to this resolution, while they would not be willing to go back, for the reasons expressed by the Senator from Arkansas, to authorize the publication of the eclectic debates for the first session of the last Congress, I suggest by way of compromise that we pay them for what they have printed of the last session of Congress, and authorize them to print the residue at the same rate.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think it would be judicious to have no action on this resolution at this session, for the reason that the Senate is very thin, and an adverse action upon it might have an effect on the Senate in its subsequent action. We now have a contract with the Union, which is a party paper, and under it, all the debates of the Senate are printed and published, and consequently spread mainly before the class of the community who are partisans corresponding with that paper. I will, with great cheerfulness, vote for any scheme which shall throw our debates before another class of the community. I would have them published in the Intelligencer and send them to another class of individuals; but I think this resolution is too broad. It covers too much ground; and the Senator who drew it did not mean precisely what the resolution purports, or if he did, I shall be compelled to disagree with him in the result to which I arrive. What is the resolution? In the first place, it proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Senate to procure certain debates to be printed in the National Intelligencer. It is not in the nature of a contract such as we have with the Union. It proposes no contract with the publishers of the Intelligencer; but it directs our Secretary to have certain debates printed in that paper. Where are they to come from? Why, sir, they are to be collated from the Globe or the Union, and to be republished in the Intelligencer. Now, I ask if it would not be treating unfairly, both the Globe and the Union, to take the reports which they have made up and published, and transfer them to another paper, and pay that paper precisely the same for publishing, as we have paid the other two papers for reporting and publishing them. Sir, I am willing to transfer these debates to the Intelligencer for the purpose of disseminating them among the public, and placing them before the partisans of that paper, but I am unwilling to pay precisely the same sum which we pay to those who have done the reporting at length. It would be unjust to them. If we should pay the Intelligencer seven dollars and fifty cents a column for republishing the debates that have been written out by others, we should increase very much the compensation which we have paid to our other publishers. That is my view of the matter.

Then, in relation to the payment of what has already been published—a mere synopsis of the proceedings of the Senate—I am not willing to say that I would not pay something for them. I incline somewhat to the opinion that I would; still I am not quite clear in the matter. I do not know that it extended much beyond that amount which they desired for the character of their press, and which was demanded from its subscribers. Still, for the purpose of doing equal justice to the political press on the other side, I am inclined to believe I would favor the payment of something for them. But taking the proposition as it stands now, it seems to me it is too broad, and fearing that an adverse decision now might influence the action of the Senate hereafter, I think it would be better not to act upon it at this time, when the Senate is so thin, but it should go over until the next session, when it can be presented to the Senate, fully matured, discussed, and acted upon by a full Senate. I think it more advisable to take that course; and I therefore move to postpone its further consideration until the first Monday in December next.

Mr. BORLAND. The remark which the Senator from Maine has made as to the compensation to be paid, is very forcible. We know that the Union and Globe have to pay for their reporting four dollars and fifty cents a column, leaving but three dollars for the publication of the debates. Now, the proposition is to give the Intelligencer as much for the mere publication, as we give them for the reporting and publication.

Mr. SHIELDS. Does the Senator object to the postponement of the resolution?

Mr. SEWARD. We all agree to the postponement.

Mr. BORLAND. Very well; though I think it would be better to reject it.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On the motion of Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after a short time the doors were reopened.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the three several drafts now on the files of the Senate drawn in favor of Thomas W. Lane by G. W. Barbour, Indian agent in California, upon R. McKee, disbursing agent.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON FRAUDS.

Mr. HOUSTON moved that ten thousand additional copies of the report of the Committee on Frauds be printed for the use of Senate.

The motion was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BORLAND subsequently reported in favor of printing the same.

The PRESIDENT. The report can be considered now only by unanimous consent.

Mr. BORLAND. I will suggest to the Chair that the rule under which the Committee on Printing acts, requires it to report at least the day after the subject is referred to it, and it has been customary very often to report such resolutions back on the same day.

Mr. SMITH. I am a member of the Committee on Printing and was not aware that any action had been had upon the matter by the committee.

Mr. BORLAND. I did not consult the Senator, and I will state the reason why I did not. During this session he has not attended the meetings of the committee, but has left the business before it, so far as he is concerned, entirely to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] and myself. I did not mean any discourtesy to the Senator, but inasmuch as he did not give any attention to the business before us I supposed he did not care to take any part in our proceedings.

Mr. SMITH. I have no fault to find with the course pursued by the committee. The Senator is, however, entirely mistaken when he says that I have not attended any of the meetings of the committee. I object to considering the report at this time.

Mr. BORLAND. I have not had the pleasure of meeting the Senator at any of the meetings of the committee during this session.

The PRESIDENT. As the consideration of the report is objected to it goes over under the rule.

PATENT OFFICE BUILDING.

The following resolution, submitted by Mr. HOUSTON on the 31st ultimo, was considered and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, instructed to furnish the Senate with a report of an examination, on the files of the Department of the Interior, made of the Patent Office Building in 1851, under the direction of the Commissioner of Public Buildings."

RINGGOLD'S CHARTS.

Mr. GWIN. Some days ago the Senate ordered one thousand copies of Captain Ringgold's charts to be purchased by the Secretary of the Senate for the use of navigators on the coast of California. The Secretary now desires to know how he is to distribute them, I therefore submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That of Captain Ringgold's charts of the coast of California heretofore ordered to be purchased, five hundred copies be sent to the Secretary of the Navy, and five hundred to the collector of San Francisco, for distribution.

Mr. BUTLER. I suppose that is as good a mode of distribution as any that can be adopted, but it is the first time that we have ever resorted to it.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would suggest to the Senator from California that a portion of the charts should be deposited here so that mariners can obtain them before reaching the coast, otherwise they may have difficulty in getting into port.

Mr. GWIN. The resolution provides that five hundred shall be deposited with the Secretary of the Navy for distribution.

Mr. HAMLIN. As they are for the benefit of merchant vessels they should be deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GWIN. I am perfectly willing that that shall be done.

Mr. BUTLER. How is the collector at San Francisco to distribute them? He has not the franking privilege.

Mr. GWIN. Navigators will obtain them from him when they enter the port.

Mr. BRIGHT. Why are not the charts to be distributed to Senators?

Mr. GWIN. For the following reason: It was objected to the original resolution in the form in which it was first introduced, that it conflicted with a provision in the deficiency bill of the last session of Congress, prohibiting the distribution of books to members of Congress. It was suggested by the colleague of the Senator, [Mr. PETTIT,] that the charts should be purchased for the benefit of navigators on the Pacific coast. That having been done, the Secretary of the Senate wants to know how he is to distribute them, and the resolution is introduced for the purpose of settling the mode of distribution.

Mr. BRIGHT. I made the inquiry for the purpose of showing the effect which an order of this kind, which is violative of the law, will produce. At the instance of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] an amendment was incorporated in the deficiency bill of the last session to the effect that there should be no further distribution of books amongst members of Congress.

Mr. HUNTER. The provision was in the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. BRIGHT. Whoever introduced it the intention was as I have stated. However, I have no disposition to interfere unnecessarily with this resolution. I opposed the resolution directing the purchase of the charts, at least I voted against it under the impression that if we had a general law of that kind it was wrong by a simple resolution to repeal or evade it. I think the passage of that resolution was an evasion of the law.

Mr. BAYARD called for the yeas and nays on the resolution and they were ordered.

Mr. MASON. I understand the object of the resolution is to direct the Secretary of the Senate to send five hundred copies of the charts for which the Senate has subscribed to the Secretary of the Treasury, and five hundred to the Collector at San Francisco for distribution in California, for the use of navigators. I was opposed to the resolution directing the purchase for the reason as has been well said that I did not think it was a legitimate use of the contingent fund of the Senate to purchase books for the use of navigators.

Mr. GWIN. I cannot imagine why the yeas and nays have been called for on such a resolution as this. The charts are very important publications and the Senate has twice after full discussion ordered the purchase of some of them. The resolution which we have now before us is merely a matter of form. It is asked for by the Secretary of the Senate in order that he may know how to distribute what have been deliberately ordered by the Senate. As to the charge of indirection in evading the law, I insist that the original resolution was nothing of the kind. It did not propose to purchase a "book." It was merely a chart of a very important portion of the coast of the United States, and one which was drawn up with great care and accuracy. The Legislature of California has instructed its Senators unanimously to ask for its republication. The resolution ordering the purchase has been agreed to; and the proposition now is to determine how they are to be distributed. I do not know that it is a matter of any great importance, but certainly I am ready to meet any issue which may be presented as to the responsibility of evading the law for the purpose of purchasing and distributing the charts.

Mr. PETTIT. When the original resolution was introduced there seemed to be some difficulty in the minds of Senators in reference to the power of the Senate, in consequence of the law which has been spoken of, to order the purchase of the charts. Whatever construction other Senators may have put upon the law, I did not think that the charts came within the term "books." But there seemed to be a great desire in the Senate—I could not mistake that—that the maps should be published for the benefit of navigators on the Pacific coast, and therefore, to obviate the difficulty, I suggested to the Senator from California to make the resolution read so upon its face. It was evident that the design of the resolution was to benefit the navigators. If the maps, charts, or whatever you choose to call them, had been purchased they would have been distributed, as near as could be by Senators, to those who were going to the Pacific coast. I know what the result would have been. As soon as the resolution was passed boys would have been round our desks asking that Senators not living in that direction should transfer their proportion of them to the Senators from California—a thing which I, located as I am in the interior, should readily have done. The design was to distribute them to navigators on that coast, and I thought we might as well say so at once. I therefore suggested to the Senator from California the modification, and he accepted it.

Now we have ordered the purchase. I am perfectly willing to vote to rescind the resolution ordering the purchase, if it is not necessary or proper to purchase the charts; but having made the order, unless we adopt this resolution or some other, the charts will lie here and become musty in the office of the Secretary. It seems to me, therefore, that some such resolution should be adopted. If five hundred are deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury or of the Navy, he will undoubtedly give them to the navigators as soon as convenient; and if the other five hundred are transmitted to the collector at San Francisco, he will furnish each navigator with one when he enters the port. Having ordered the purchase of the maps, I do not see that there is any more proper way to dispose of them, inasmuch as Senators have not the power to distribute them. I would vote to reconsider the resolution which we have already adopted, and retrace our steps, if the Senate should be so disposed; otherwise I shall vote for the distribution.

Mr. BAYARD. I object to the resolution, because I cannot see upon what authority the contingent fund of the Senate of the United States is to be charged with the disbursement of moneys to be distributed among the collectors of the United States. You are setting a precedent now for which you can find no anterior one. You are setting a precedent which will necessarily lead to applications of a similar character from other parts of the Union. There is no reason why you should adopt such a resolution in favor of the mariners of one portion of the Union and not of the other, and if you are to pay for charts of the coast of California out of the contingent fund of the Senate, which have not been ordered by Congress, and distribute them through the medium of the collector of San Francisco, you must expect of course to distribute charts of other portions of our coast through other collectors. That is what this will lead to, and I would rather let the charts lie here and rot than sanction such a precedent.

Mr. STUART. I desire to say a few words on this subject, in order that there may be no misconstruction of the vote which I gave on the former resolution, and the one which I intend to give on this. I disagreed with many Senators upon the construction of the provision in the deficiency bill to which reference has been made. It was introduced into the House of Representatives by a gentleman from North Carolina for the object, and the sole object of preventing the annual distribution of books to members of Congress to constitute a library for themselves. The law is not properly susceptible of any other construction. It does not prohibit, in my judgment, either House of Congress from publishing a document for the purpose of distribution in the country through the medium of its members. That was the view I took of it when it was passed, and it is the view I take of it now. I wish, therefore, only to say that in supporting this resolution, I shall do it for the purpose of providing for the distribution of the charts without taxing the members of the Senate with the duty, and that it shall appear that I had no idea of evading the law in voting for the resolution the other day. I did not think the original resolution infringed the law at all, and hence had no difficulty in voting for it, and shall have no difficulty in voting for the resolution providing for the distribution of the charts.

Mr. CHASE. The law to which the Senator has referred, is in these words:

"Hereafter no books shall be distributed to members of Congress, except such as are ordered to be printed as public documents by the Congress of which they are members."

No books shall be distributed unless they have been ordered as public documents. The word "books," as every lawyer knows, comprehends charts. If a court were called upon to put a legal interpretation upon this law, charts would most unquestionably be included. The question then resolves itself into this: has this work been ordered to be printed as a public document? It is known that it has never been so ordered. As I understand it, it has been printed at the private expense of the able and ingenious gentleman who compiled it. Heretofore, and before the passage of this law, the Senate ordered the purchase of a certain number of copies of the work. They were purchased, and distributed to Senators in the usual mode, and I think most of them took the direction suggested by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. PETTIT.] It was the direction very cheerfully given to mine.

I said, when this question was originally before us, that I might have no objection to voting for the resolution under the peculiar circumstances of the navigation of the Pacific coast, if the law did not stand directly in the way. I do not think that we can construe laws by the reported opinions and views of gentlemen who speak upon them. We must look at the recorded language of the laws themselves; and when we have obtained the construction from the language, we are bound by it. Inasmuch as the law, in my judgment, included such a work, it seemed to me to be a violation of it to pass the resolution ordering the purchase. It is true that the effect of the law was sought to be avoided by omitting the language contained in the law, "for distribution to members of Congress;" but that, it seems to me, rather made the matter worse than better, because it reduced the resolution to the character of an attempt to evade the law instead of founding it upon an honest difference of opinion in regard to its construction, such as exists between myself and the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Stuart.] For these reasons I was opposed to the original resolution, and I feel bound to vote against all resolutions intended to carry it into effect.

Mr. BORLAND. It seems to me that the Senator makes an objection to the present proposition that is not altogether applicable. He opposed the original resolution, he says, because he thought it was an evasion of the law which forbids the distribution of such things—books, charts, or whatever they may be—to members of Congress. Now, after that resolution has been adopted, and the arrangements have been made for the purchase of the charts, a proposition is made to distribute them—how? Not to members of Congress, but to put them at the disposal of certain officers of the Government; and the Senator opposes that. What will he do with them? This proposition shows now, if it was not shown before, that there was no intention to distribute them to members of Congress—that there was no intention to violate the law because that law forbids simply a distribution to members of Congress to prevent them voting themselves libraries. It was not intended to prohibit the purchase of such works for public purposes. The proposition is now to put the charts at the disposal of the proper Department of the Government for the use of navigators, the purpose for which they were ordered to be purchased.

The law which the Senator from Ohio has read if he will look to it again he will see, says nothing about purchase for public purposes. It simply prohibits a distribution to members of Congress. The resolution so far from going in contravention of the law carries out its very spirit. The resolution which we adopted the other day was to purchase these charts for the interests of navigation, and the object now is to indicate to the Secretary of the Senate what disposition he shall make of them in executing that resolution and thus we relieve him from embarrassment. As they are in his hands he must adopt some mode of disposing of them. This simply points out to him what the Senate considers the proper mode of distribution, viz: to put them at the disposition of officers of the Government and not of members of Congress. It does not come near the law and in no respect does it violate its spirit and intention.

Mr. MALLORY. The order for the purchase of the charts has already been made. That I conclude is a matter settled, and the only question now is as to their distribution. I suppose the Senate will desire them to take that direction which will confer the greatest amount of benefit on the interests of navigation. California I suppose herself has no vessel interested, but there is scarcely a part of the country having any shipping that has not sent one vessel or more to the ports of California. If the Senator from California had not already made his proposition, I would suggest to him that none of these charts should be sent to California for distribution; that they ought to be distributed on the Atlantic sea-board for navigators going to California, because it is to enable them to reach the port of California that the charts are wanted. I will suggest to the Senator from California not to give the five hundred to the Secretary of the Treasury because it is unheard of for the Secretary of the Treasury to distribute charts. The charts which are printed under an act of Congress are distributed by the chief of the Coast Survey office. He sends them to the Chambers of Commerce and other commercial institutions of the country which can best distribute them so as to confer the greatest amount of benefit upon the commercial interests. If it is in order I will move to strike out "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert "Chief of the Coast Survey."

Mr. RUSK. I see no difficulty in the way of this distribution being ordered. The law referred to by the Senator from Ohio is that hereafter no books shall be distributed to members of Congress, and therefore, whether we call these charts "books" or not, the law does not apply to them. I think, however, that the Senator from California had better modify his resolution so as to direct that all the copies shall be turned over to the Secretary of the Treasury to be by him distributed. He, as a matter of course, is better informed of the wants of navigators than the collector.

Mr. GWIN. I will modify my resolution accordingly.

The PRESIDENT. There is an amendment pending offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. MALLORY. I withdraw it.

Mr. BAYARD. I supposed that if you are to make any order upon the subject, the Secretary of the Treasury will probably be the officer most likely to distribute them according to your intention; but my objection lies deeper than that. You are setting a precedent to the effect that out of the contingent fund of the Senate of the United States, you will order books to be paid for, for distribution by the Executive officers of the Government. Where is your authority for that.

Mr. SHIELDS. I agree with the Senator that this is not a contingency that ought to be paid out of our contingent fund, but I understand that the maps are already engraved, the contract is made for them; and all that is necessary is to know how to distribute them.

Mr. BAYARD. I understand that, but I consider the principle more important than the mere question whether the books are to be paid for by a few thousand dollars or not. I will never sanction an order of this kind for the distribution of books purchased under such circumstances, by money taken out of the contingent fund of the Senate, when Congress has not made an appropriation for the object. What did you decide yesterday in reference to the valuable report of Mr. Andrews? You decided almost unanimously that you had no authority to pay for it out of your contingent fund. Whence, then, comes your authority to purchase books for distribution, not by Senators, but by the Secretary of the Treasury, or any other Executive officer? It is an evasion of the law. You must judge of the intent of all laws by the language used by the legislators who passed them; and if you take the language of this law, whatever may have been the private intentions of the members, there can be no question that it prevents the distribution of all books among members of Congress, except such as are printed as public documents. In consequence of that, you did not pass the resolution in the shape in which it was originally introduced providing for the purchase of the books out of the contingent fund of the Senate for the use of Senators. You seek now not only to evade the intent of the law which is to prevent such an abuse of the contingent fund of the Senate, but to introduce the precedent that the contingent fund of the Senate is to be used for the purpose of purchasing books, I care not what they are or what they are not, to be distributed by executive officers. Is that a proper mode of proceeding? Ought not legislation to be requisite for such a purpose? If so the proper course is this: If you have unadvisedly chosen to pass a resolution for the purchase of books, the question whether they are to lie for a few months among our other documents is of very little importance compared with the establishment of such a precedent as this. Let them remain under your former order if they have been purchased, or the engravings have been ordered, or any contracts made, and do what is right in principle. At the next session of Congress seek to pass a law authorizing action of this kind, and see whether on discussion the Congress of the United States will agree to depute to collectors and officers of that class the distribution of books purchased by means of the contingent fund of either House.

Mr. BORLAND. I will call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to this fact: the resolution ordering the purchase of the charts expressly provides that they shall be for the use of navigators on the Pacific coast. We have ordered their purchase. I presume the contract for them has already been made. They are perhaps ready to be delivered, and the only question is, whether we shall let them lie here in some lumber room to the next session, or whether we shall put them in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury for distribution among the navigators on the coast? That is the sole object of the resolution.

Mr. BAYARD. Precisely; and if I put the value of the charts against what I was going to say is an atrocity in principle, I might vote for the resolution. You can find no precedent for ordering books to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate for distribution in this mode. Show me the precedent, if any such exists. It seems to me the abuse is palpable. Answer me if you can, in consistence with the vote which you gave on the report of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, in reference to Mr. Andrew's report. Why did you refuse to pay the expenses in that case? Because it was not prudent for you to make such expenditures out of your contingent fund. If it was not proper in that case, on what principle do you make it proper here? If you have purchased the books improperly, let them lie until the next meeting of Congress without being distributed.

Mr. RUSK. The argument of the honorable Senator from Delaware would have been good against the passage of the resolution in the first instance; but I do not think by refusing to distribute the charts in their proper channels, that we should advance a single step the principle for which he seems to contend. I am not certain of the propriety of passing the original resolution, but when he says it is an atrocious principle, and one for which there is no precedent, I will merely say that if he had taken the trouble to look he would have found that there is nothing but precedents for it. The House of Representatives has paid out of its contingent fund large amounts for books to be distributed among its members, and the Senate has done the same thing.

Mr. BAYARD. For distribution to members, but not to executive officers. You are extending the principle.

Mr. BORLAND. Nothing is more common in making an order by either House to purchase books out of its contingent fund, than to give a portion of them to an executive department for distribution.

Mr. RUSK. Precisely. To remedy the evil, and to avoid the precedents set by both Houses, of paying out of the contingent fund for books to be distributed among their members, we passed a law. What is it? That neither House of Congress shall distribute amongst its members any books except documents printed by order of both Houses. This is not a book of that description. It is not proposed to be distributed amongst members of Congress, and therefore it is no violation of the law. The honorable Senator from Michigan was perfectly correct in what he said. The evil intended to be remedied by the law was the distribution of books among members of Congress. This is, therefore, not a violation of the law. At the same time, however, I have no doubt that it would have been altogether better if we had not undertaken to act separately, and paid for the purchase out of our contingent fund. But that is gone by. We have made the order, and the question is shall we turn round, and make the error three or four times worse by piling the document up here to the inconvenience of the Secretary of the Senate, and the damage of the navigating interest.

Mr. BAYARD. I presume the reason why there is no express restriction in the law as to the mode of distribution is, that it never entered into the imagination of Congress that such an attempt would be made. It had been the custom to purchase books by means of the contingent fund of either House of Congress and distribute them through the medium of its members. The law chose to restrict that in express terms. It did not go further, and restrict the abuse which was never contemplated, of purchasing books by means of the contingent fund, for distribution by the Executive authorities. Not supposing that such an authority would be assumed, it imposed no such restriction; therefore, my answer to the honorable Senator is, since you have passed such a resolution ordering the purchase of these documents, I am for letting them lie here in the hands of the Secretary of the Senate until he has the warrant of law for their distribution. I will not sanction one wrong resolution by voting for another.

The PRESIDENT. The resolution has been modified to read as follows:

Ordered, That the copies of Captain Ringgold's charts of the coast of California heretofore ordered to be purchased be delivered to the Secretary of the Treasury for distribution to the Navy and commercial marine navigating that coast.

The yeas and nays were taken on the adoption of the order, and it was agreed to—yeas 21, nays 17, as follows:

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Atherton, Bayard, Bright, Butler, Chase, Clayton, Douglas, Evans, Hunter, Mason, Norris, Pearce, Smith, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, and Toucey—17.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by SIDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., his Secretary, and on motion of Mr. GWIN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business. After some time the doors were reopened.

VOTING BY MACHINERY.

Mr. HOUSTON submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to contract with Henry Johnson, the inventor, for the construction in the Senate Chamber of his new mode of taking the yeas and nays: Provided, The entire cost of construction shall not exceed the sum of $1,500 to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

COMMERCIAL REGULATIONS.

Mr. HAMLIN. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate five thousand additional copies of the report of the Secretary of State relating to the commercial regulations with foreign nations.

I ask the consideration of that resolution at this time. I will state very briefly what it is.

A SENATOR. Has it been reported from the Committee on Printing?

Mr. HAMLIN. It has the approbation of that committee. I had an interview with a late Secretary of State [Mr. Webster] on this subject at the last long session of Congress, the result of which was that during that session, on the 19th of July, I submitted a resolution calling upon the State Department to furnish the Senate with such information as it could, relating to the subjects named in the resolution. The report has been submitted to the Senate. It will form a little volume of about one hundred pages. It is a very valuable work, showing, as it does, the regulations of foreign commerce of almost every foreign nation. As the expense of printing it will be very little, and as the resolution meets the approbation of the Committee on Printing to which I have submitted it, I trust the Senate will adopt it.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

OPEN EXECUTIVE SESSIONS.

Mr. CHASE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution which I submitted yesterday in regard to Executive sessions.

The motion was agreed to. The resolution is as follows:

"Resolved, That the sessions and all proceedings of the Senate shall be public and open, except when matters communicated in confidence by the President, shall be received and considered, and in such other cases as the Senate by resolution from time to time shall specially order; and so much of the 38th, 39th, and 40th rules as may be inconsistent with this resolution is hereby rescinded."

Mr. CHASE. I suppose every Senator understands the object of this resolution. With the permission of the Senate I will so far modify its terms as to make it take effect after the present session of Congress and submit it to a vote with a very few remarks.

It changes the existing rule to this extent: The present rule requires the consideration with closed doors of treaties and nominations, and all confidential communications of the President. The proposed amendment requires that all sessions and all proceedings of the Senate shall be open and public, except in such special cases as the President or Senate from time to time shall decide to be proper for secret consideration. The proposed change would substitute for the general rule of secrecy in respect to several classes of subjects the general rule of publicity, with such exceptions as particular exigencies shall from time to time require.

As the rules now stand all treaties are considered in secret session, and so are all nominations, and all communications marked confidential. Should the rules be altered as proposed by the resolution I have had the honor to submit, the injunction of secrecy will be confined to such treaties as may be specially communicated in confidence by the Executive and to such nominations as the Senate in the exercise of a sound discretion may deem it necessary, from considerations affecting private character or the public service, to discuss in privacy.

There is a large class of treaties legislative in their character, and including very important public considerations, which ought to be publicly debated. There is no reason why they should be considered in secret session. On the contrary, in respect to treaties of this character it is quite desirable that the public should be informed, and fully informed as to their provisions and as to the debates and votes here upon them. So also many, and indeed almost all, nominations are confirmed or rejected upon principles of public or party policy, without reference to private character. I see no reason why debates and votes upon these should not be public. Whenever any questions involving moral character are raised, it will be in the power of any committee or any member to move that the doors be closed.

There can then be no objection to the adoption of the resolution upon either of the grounds generally relied on by the advocates of secret sessions. Those grounds are, first, that secrecy is frequently necessary to the success of important negotiations with foreign countries, and that this secrecy would be impossible if the treaties should be debated and voted upon in public. There may be some force in this, but the objection does not touch the proposed amendment. The President has charge of foreign negotiations and is the best judge of the occasions on which secrecy is required, and whatever he thinks proper to communicate in confidence will still be treated as confidential, if the rule which I propose should be adopted.

The second ground of objection is that private character should not be made the subject of public debate. I will not say that this objection would not deserve consideration if the proposed rule imperatively required the public consideration of all nominations without exception. But it does not. It expressly excepts from its operation those special cases in which the Senate by resolution may enjoin secrecy. Such orders will be made when the nature of particular cases make such orders necessary or proper. In all other cases where the action of the Senate is determined by general or purely political considerations, the people have a right to know the character of our discussions and the reasons of our votes. Our institutions are based upon the principle of publicity and responsibility—secret sessions are exceptions to these general principles; these exceptions should be confined within the narrowest practicable limits, and reduced to the smallest possible number.

Mr. HUNTER. It seems to me that this proposes a very important change in our rules, and one which I fear would be very mischievous. As it now stands, the general rule is that when Executive communications are made in reference to treaties and nominations, our deliberations are to be in secret, unless we choose to order otherwise. If we do make the deliberations public, that is the exception. This proposes to reverse the rule, and require that all discussions shall be public unless the President or we, on account of special considerations, choose to make them secret. The result will be that we shall have no more secret sessions in relation to these matters. It involves a total change of the rule. It will lead to that result, because if, upon the question of a nomination, the Senate chooses to say that its consideration shall be secret, immediately it will be proclaimed to the world that the man has been accused, and he will desire to know of what he has been accused, and how he can defend himself.

So, too, in relation to treaties. If, contrary to the general rule, which this proposes, to consider them in public, we should go into secret session upon a treaty, it would be supposed that there was something especially delicate in our foreign relations. From this, considerations might be derived affecting the supposed probability of peace or war, and also the credit, and it may be the stocks, of the country, and in order to prevent suspicion, we should be forced to go into open session, and consider in public what ought to be considered in private.

I do not believe that any sensible amount of mischief has arisen from the fact that our deliberations upon nominations and treaties have been secret. I believe we have deliberated with quite as much regard for public interest under the seal of secrecy, when we were really advising and consulting the President in regard to its matters, as we should have done if we had thrown open the doors and subjected our debates and our votes to popular scrutiny. I believe it is far safer to adhere to the rule than to make the change which is now proposed.

Mr. BORLAND. I am sorry to differ from my friend from Virginia in supposing that any detriment can come to the public interest of this country by subjecting anything and everything to public scrutiny. I cannot conceive the case of a treaty or anything else in which injury could come to the public interest by opening them to full inspection.

Mr. HUNTER. Does the Senator think it would be better to expose the deliberations of the President and Cabinet council to public scrutiny?

Mr. BORLAND. I should have no objection to it so far as they could be made public. I do not believe, as an American citizen and an American Senator, that any public officer of the Government has the right to utter sentiments affecting the public interest, which are not properly before the public for the inspection of every man in it. That is the ground on which I stand; and I stand upon it, because I believe the popular intelligence is sufficient to discuss wisely and properly every question that may come before the country. As to a man's private affairs, he may do as he pleases. The public have nothing to do with them, so far as they relate to him and his family; but so far as relates to the public interests of society, and the public interests of this country, whether on our own soil, or as they will stand in relation to foreign countries, I believe no man has a right to express a sentiment, or do any act which every man in this country, who has the rights and responsibilities of a citizen, who is to bear the burden of the Government, and whose interest is to be affected by its action, has not a right to know. That is my view of the relations between the public officers of this Government, whether legislative, executive, or judicial, and the people. I cannot conceive that this Government can properly be administered upon any other ground, unless we deny to the people the requisite amount of intelligence, patriotism, and honesty to give a fair consideration to all questions, and dispose of them as the interests of the country require.

These are the general considerations on which I stand in relation to this matter. Gentlemen seem to think that there is something sacred in a man's private character. I admit that there is, yet when he comes forward as an applicant or candidate for public favor, there is nothing that the public has not a right, and ought not to be permitted to know. Sir, is there anything more sacred in the character of an individual who comes before the Senate, nominated by the President for an office under this Government, than there is in the character of an individual who goes before a State Legislature for a seat on this floor, or before the people for a seat in the other House of Congress, or for a place in a State Legislature, or for a governor, judge, or anything to which the people are electable? I conceive not; and whoever supposes at home or anywhere but here, when a man becomes a candidate for office that his character is so sacred that we cannot talk about it in public? What do our newspaper presses do with every man's character who places himself before the public as a candidate for office? They examine him in every particular. They hold him up to the gaze of the public. If he has faults, they make them known; and they ought to be made known. Why then should the character of a man who wants to be a foreign minister, an auditor, a treasurer, a secretary of State, or any other officer to whose appointment we advise and consent, be more sacred? The public have a right to know his character. If it be good then he is fit for the office. If it be bad the people have a right to know it; and their representatives in the Senate have no right to confirm a nomination unless it is of a character with which the people can be satisfied.

With regard to the treaties, I may be behind the age in which I live. It is probable that I am; but I cannot conceive of an instance when it is necessary that a treaty should be acted upon in secret. I do believe that if in all our discussions upon treaties the doors of the Senate had been open, and the newspaper press at liberty to comment upon our proceedings, very many treaties which are now the law of the land would never have been ratified. I do not believe the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo or the Clayton-Bulwer treaty would have been ratified; or at any rate we should have been spared the almost interminable discussion which we had at a recent session, consuming almost all our time, and costing how much money, I do not know, if they had been laid before the public, when the newspaper press could have taken them up and discussed them, and the people could have understood them. I believe there are many men who voted for those treaties, who would be glad if they could go back and vote "no" upon them. I believe incalculable mischief has been done to the public interests by having secret discussions, and I believe it would be avoided if the doors were always open to reporters of the public press, and to the people themselves to come in, and hear every word uttered on the floor, and then be permitted to discuss among themselves every question which is before us.

Mr. PHELPS. During my experience in this body, several efforts have been made to change the rule of the Senate in relation to our mode of holding Executive sessions; and to my gratification every attempt of that kind has been successfully resisted. I have to say now that from the very existence of the Senate down to the present day, the rule which now obtains has governed it. We have then from the first organization of the Senate to the present day, the opinions of all who have gone before us in support of the rule as it now exists, to treat matters of a certain description in secret session. Why should we abolish it? Why should we at this stage of the Senate with a bare quorum present take it upon ourselves to change permanently the character of the Senate, and to regulate the proceedings of those who are to come after us? Sir, a radical change of this kind ought not to be made hastily. It ought not to be made in a moment, when the sense of a full Senate cannot be obtained.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the Senator permit me to say that this is not a new question? Five years ago it was before the body, and it has been more or less discussed at every session since.

Mr. PHELPS. That is just what I remarked in the outset, that efforts have been made from time to time to abolish our present rule, and they have always been unsuccessful. There are most abundant reasons for our holding secret sessions. Does any man believe that our negotiations with foreign nations can be conducted with success, if every project which is started by the treaty-making power is to be made and acted upon subject to public inspection at the time? Are we to gain anything by exhibiting our diplomacy to the world when the practice of the rest of the world is to keep their diplomacy to themselves? It seems to me that we are not. We are often compelled, in the discussion of treaties, to act upon considerations which at the moment would not bear to meet the public view. Take the instance suggested by the Senator, the treaty of peace with Mexico. That treaty was negotiated during a period of great excitement. When we were called upon to act on it the excited state of feeling arising from the war in which we were then involved was very high, and it was therefore our duty not to be guided by the public feeling and public excitement, but by our own deliberate judgment on the subject, trusting to a rational view afterwards, when the public excitement subsided, to justify ourselves before the public. And that we could not have done in open session.

But there is another consideration which presents itself to my mind—that suggested by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Hunter] in regard to the subject of nominations. If it is to be understood that all nominations are to be public, unless, when particular nominations are designated as the subject of private consideration, every time we consider a nomination in private it will involve us in difficulty. I have had occasion to oppose nominations for my own State, even those sent in by a Whig Administration, and to give my reasons for so doing; and I have had occasion to say here that appointments made even by my own political friends were of a very objectionable character. Nominations of this kind come before us, and Senators feeling a delicacy on the subject would not feel at liberty to speak with perfect freedom in public of the character of a man who may be up for an office, and whom we should think incompetent for the office, and if one were to move to make the matter one for the private consideration of the Senate, the motion itself would indicate what was to follow. Under these circumstances, of all things on earth the nominations for offices submitted to the consideration of the Senate should be treated as confidential, as we would treat them in our personal intercourse. I trust, therefore, the practice of the Senate will not be departed from. I know the subject has been agitated and discussed, but the result of the discussion has always been that the Senate has adhered to its preceding practice; and I think if the contrary method obtained the experience of the Senate would, in a few months, show them the necessity for changing it back to the old one.

Mr. BORLAND. I am not at all surprised to hear the sentiments expressed by the Senator from Vermont, for I would say with all respect to him that they are appropriate to the political party to which he belongs, and to so able a representative of it as he is upon this floor. It is perfectly natural for gentlemen of his political school to suppose that this Government (for I understand that to be one of the fundamental principles of his party) is something separate and apart from the people—above them—and having rights which the people have not. I was a little surprised, though, to hear the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. Hunter,] because he belongs to another political school which does hold to responsibility on the part of the representative to the constituents. But, sir, the Senator from Vermont I think is perfectly consistent. He is acting upon and carrying out the great principle upon which his party has acted in all its policy from the beginning of the Government down. The idea that the Government is a thing separate and apart from the people, and looks down upon them as altogether without intelligence and disqualified for considering and determining on matters relative to their interest, is drawn from Governments on the other side of the Atlantic; but under this Government, which is based upon the very idea of the intelligence of the people, their competency for self-government, their sufficiency in point of public virtue and intelligence to understand and discharge wisely and properly all questions relating to their interests, it seems to me that such a doctrine is altogether out of place.

With regard to treaties, it seems to me that secret negotiations are very proper to European countries, where the Governments do not look to the interests of the people, but only to the interest of the particular dynasty that happens to be reigning at the time, and where the diplomacy and negotiations consist in a sort of family arrangement for the benefit of the governors, and not of the governed, leading to many things with which we do not have anything to do in our treaties, such as their contracts for marriage for the purpose of sustaining such a dynasty on a particular throne, for the elevation of one and putting down of another, and to carry out some combination among the nations. We stand apart from all such considerations as those. We have no connection with them. We have no such connection with other Governments. We deny the right of other governments to interfere in our affairs, and we disclaim the right on our part to interfere with theirs. It has seemed to me from the limited view I have been able to take of the subject, that our system of diplomacy has been one of humbuggery and deceit, and that if we had a little plain sailing and open dealing in our relations with foreign countries, we should have much less cause of trouble. I know these may be considered ultra Democratic, and radical notions. Very well, I am content to entertain them, and leave to those gentlemen who believe there is something sacred in the character of our Government, some rights peculiar to it, separate and apart from the people, to entertain the opposite opinion; but until I can believe that the people are not sufficiently intelligent or virtuous to be intrusted with their own affairs, and that the representative shall not be held directly and strictly responsible for everything he does, and everything he says in relation to the public interest, I shall be opposed to anything like secrecy in our proceedings. If our proceedings are right we have no cause to fear their being submitted to the people. If we are not conscious that they are right, if they are of a doubtful policy or positively wrong, we should not engage in them. Sir, I want my constituents to know not only what I do in regard to their interests, but what I think. I would entertain no opinion and express none, and give no vote that I would not desire them to know, and the reasons which govern me in giving it.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. President, I am extremely gratified with the position which the honorable Senator has taken. Although I have been for some years a member of this body, I have never considered myself as the particular exponent of the principles and views of any party. If the Senator attributes to my party sentiments which the honorable Senator from Virginia has just advanced, and if I am the exponent of Whig principles and practices, unfortunately the distinguished Senator from Virginia is in the same category. Now, sir, I might retort upon the Senator, and ask him if the Senator from Virginia is an exponent of Whig principles? In the few remarks which I made, I alluded to the practice of the Senate from its origin to the present day, during which it has been sustained by all who have gone before us, and certainly they were not all Whigs.

But, sir, there is another consideration here. Is not the Senator aware that this practice has prevailed during a period of some sixty or seventy years, and when the majority in the Senate has consisted of his party? Has it not been so during most of our experience here? And if this rule be one consisting of Whig principles and Whig notions, how happens it that the Senator and his political friends have not abrogated it? Sir, if this is a Whig doctrine it comes with not a very good grace from a gentleman associated with the majority of this body, to retort upon us.

I do not know that anything fell from me in the remarks which I submitted, which would indicate that I had any party view in the expression of them. I spoke of the propriety of the thing. Now, I put it to the Senator from Arkansas himself, if a nomination were made from his own State, which was unpalatable to himself, would he be willing to express his views fully in public upon it? I am perhaps not a man of as much firmness as he is, but I do not think that I would. And here let me remark that this rule of the Senate has been made for its own protection, and it ought not to be submitted to the discretion of the President. It is not for the Executive to determine whether our proceedings shall be in secret or in public. It pertains to the dignity of the body to regulate that. If a nomination is made, and the President consults us in relation to the propriety of that nomination, the very proposition is confidential in its character. Suppose the chairman of a committee to whom a nomination is referred in this body appeals to me and says, "Sir, here is a nomination for your own State; you know the man; what do you say of him?" I may reply that he is a very good citizen, but that in my humble opinion he has not the integrity which entitles him to that office. Would any chairman of a committee in this body feel himself at liberty to come and report to the Senate that I had expressed doubts of his integrity? Would any member of a committee who consulted a Senator from the State, feel at liberty to disclose a communication which was asked for as confidential? Now, sir, if there would be no propriety in that, if there would be no propriety in disclosing it to an assembly of this character, is there any propriety in calling in the whole country as witnesses to what I would say in respect to the man? The Senator seems to consider that all the affairs are of a private nature. But there are considerations which come before us connected with confidential communications between us and the President, which are in their very nature confidential, and ought to be so treated, and would be so treated in the private intercourse of all honorable men.

I am not disposed to protract this discussion, but, sir, I must be permitted to say that whatever may be the views of other gentlemen, I hope and trust that I shall leave this place, and take leave of public life with a better consciousness than that of having been the mere organ of a party. In the remarks which I made I had no regard to any question in its political aspect. If it were a party question the matter would have been different. In the remarks which I made, I had only reference to what was the practice of the Senate, and the propriety of that practice.

Mr. BUTLER. This is not the first time that this subject has been under the consideration of the Senate since I have been a member of it. I recollect that some five or six years ago an honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. Allen,] introduced a resolution of the same kind; and I know that in the discussion which took place at that time all the old and respected Senators who were then in the Senate, Mr. Calhoun, Mr. Clay, and Mr. Webster, took the same ground with the fathers of the Republic, and without distinction of party insisted upon the security of this usage; that is, of the Senate being a confidential body for certain purposes to advise the President. I should be very sorry to see it departed from. This is not a pure democracy. If the Government of the United States was an undisguised and simple democracy, perhaps the gentlemen might well insist upon a resolution of this kind. They might make the Senate the arena for the discussion of every subject as was done in Athens, or in democracies where the people directly had a vote. But we are a confederacy of organized republics, and we live under a constitution—a constitution by whose obligations I feel bound, as well as the usages under it.

In private life when we have very grave matters to consider, we generally call friends into confidential consultation. Grand juries are organized upon the same principle.

Mr. BORLAND. Very improperly.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator says very improperly. I am one of those who believe that there is much more wisdom in the experience and trial and ordeal of time than in a hasty judgment. It has been quaintly said by some one that constitutions are made by a few sober men to control themselves and the many when they are drunk. I believe that it is not an unwise proposition, that a constitution should be made deliberately and absolutely to guard us against temptations of excitement when occasions might arise to inflame the passions.

In regard to discussions on treaties, if foreign nations were to understand that we were to deliberate upon their secret communications, and upon their treaties, in public, I doubt very much whether they would make such communications as would enable us to take such advantages as would be of service to us. I doubt very much whether they would not withhold from us the very clue to the system of policy to enable us to adopt it with intelligence. Sir, such discussions of treaties is unknown in any other Government. I know it is said that this is a perfect democracy, that this is a model republic, which is to set everything at defiance, and that all that has gone before us, and the precepts and example of our ancestors, are so many impediments in the way of the progress of modern intelligence. I do not think so. I have the organ of veneration. If you are to open the galleries of the Senate to witness the discussion of nominations, in many instances, rather than go out to take my share in the collisions with men on the streets, I would say nothing at all. I might be tempted, from a sense of justice, to do so. If Senators and the President asked my opinion I would give it freely and fairly, but I would give it under such circumstances at least as not to subject myself to the popular mobs that might be organized out of the Chamber.

The old usages of our Government seem to be crumbling away. Democratic clubs and associations are taking the steps that should emanate from the people. Sir, I am as much a friend of the people as the Senator; but I am a friend to the people whose judgment, whose public interest is to be respected. I am not a friend of that people who are to be regarded as the irresponsible multitude, whose transient public sentiments are not to govern me. If this country is to preserve its liberty, and we are to appeal to the tribunal of the people, I want it to be one of intelligence; and it is on that account that I wish to preserve this Government in its ancient form. I am not one of those who would break down, unnecessarily at least, any of the great landmarks which our forefathers prescribed for our guidance.

Mr. SUMNER. Party allusions and party considerations have been brought to bear upon this question. I wish to regard it for a moment in the light of the Constitution and our institutions. In the Constitution there is no injunction of secrecy on any of the proceedings of the Senate; nor is there any requirement of publicity. To the Senate is left absolutely the determination of its rules of proceedings. In thus abstaining from all regulation of this matter the framers of the Constitution have obviously regarded it as in all respects within the discretion of the Senate, to be exercised from time to time as it thinks best.

The Senate exercises three important functions: First, the legislative or parliamentary power, wherein it acts concurrently with the House of Representatives, as well as the President; secondly, the power "to advise and consent" to treaties with foreign countries in concurrence with the President; and, thirdly, the power "to advise and consent" to nominations by the President to offices under the Constitution. I say nothing of another, rarely called into exercise, the sole power to try impeachments.

At the first organization of the Government the proceedings of the Senate, whether in legislation or on treaties or on nominations, were with closed doors. In this respect the legislative business and executive business were conducted alike. This continued down to the second session of the Third Congress, in 1794, when, in pursuance of a formal resolution, the galleries were allowed to be opened so long as the Senate were engaged in their legislative capacity, unless in such cases as might, in the opinion of the Senate, require secrecy; and this rule has continued ever since. Here was an exercise of the discretion of the Senate, in obvious harmony with public sentiment and the spirit of our institutions.

The change now proposed goes still further. It opens the doors on all occasions, whether legislative or executive, except when specially ordered otherwise. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Butler] says that the Senate is a confidential body, and should be ready to receive confidential communications from the President. But this will still be the case if we adopt the resolution now under consideration. The limitation proposed seems ample for all exigencies, while the general rule will be publicity. The Executive sessions with closed doors, shrouded from the public gaze and public criticism, constitute an exceptional part of our system, too much in harmony with the proceedings of other Governments less liberal in character. The genius of our institutions requires publicity. The ancient Roman who bade his architect so to construct his house that his guests and all that he did could be seen by the world, is a fit model for the American people.

Mr. MASON. I move to postpone the further consideration of the resolution until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Sidney Webster, Esq., his Private Secretary; and on motion by Mr. Gwin, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened,

And the Senate adjourned.

Thursday, April 7, 1853.

AMENDMENT OF A RULE.

Mr. BRIGHT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the 34th rule of the Senate be amended by adding to the clause providing for a committee of three members, whose duty it shall be to audit and control the contingent expenses of the Senate, the following:

And to whom shall be referred all resolutions directing the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate, or creating a charge on the same.

PUBLICATION OF DEBATES.

Mr. SEWARD. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its consideration now:

Resolved, That the Secretary be authorized to procure the publication in the National Intelligencer, of so much of the debates of the Senate during the last session of Congress as has not been already published in that paper, and to pay for such publication, and also for the publication of speeches of that session already made in the Intelligencer, the sum of four dollars per column.

Mr. CHASE. Let it lie over.

RECESS.

Mr. MASON. We seldom receive any Executive communications until after one o'clock; I propropose, therefore, if it meets the approbation of the Senate, that we take a recess until half past one. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at half past one; and on motion by Mr. Mason, proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after a short time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

HOUR OF MEETING.

On motion by Mr. MASON, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet to-morrow at two o'clock.

VOTING BY MACHINERY.

Mr. HOUSTON presented the memorial of Henry Johnson, the inventer of a new mode for taking the yeas and nays, asking an appropriation to enable him to make a trial of his machine in the Senate Chamber.

The memorial was read.

Mr. HOUSTON. In submitting that memorial I am willing to acknowledge that I am not sufficient of a mechanic to pronounce a positive decision upon this new mode of taking the yeas and nays; but from the examination which I have been able to give it, in connection with other Senators older and more experienced than myself, I feel convinced that the adoption of it will be the means of a great saving of time, that in point of accuracy it is perfect, and it will afford Senators who wish to talk a much better opportunity than they now have. It will have a tendency to shorten the sessions of Congress, and particularly so in the House of Representative, if it should answer the purpose for which it is intended, as I believe it will. The sum required for the purpose of making the experiment is inconsiderable compared to the value that will ultimately result to the Government if it should be found efficient as is expected. Fifteen hundred dollars is all that will be necessary, and that will enable a key to be put at every Senator's desk and the machine to be put in operation. In the operation of the machine there is no possibility of an inaccuracy taking place. I know not how many Senators have examined it; but I am sure that any one who has paid any attention to its operation in the hands of the inventor must be satisfied that it is a perfect machine of its kind.

It may be objected that in the working of the machine while the yeas and nays are being taken, if a Senator were not in his own seat he could not vote. That is very easily obviated, for when the yeas and nays are read over by the Clerk, after the vote has been taken, he could record his vote in the same manner as is done now. He could do that if he were absent and came in during the call of the yeas and nays or at their termination, so that no objection can be made to it on that ground. No other person but the Senator himself can vote in his seat. If the machine is fixed at his desk he has his key and can lock it when he leaves it. No one can take advantage of his position to vote in his absence; and not only that, if he should lose his key, all that he will have to do when the yeas and nays are read over will be to address the President and record his vote as is now done. It will not conceal the vote of any individual. He cannot vote covertly because his name will be read by the Clerk as soon as the voting has taken place. I can see no possible objection to the machine. If the experiment should prove it to be worth anything, it will certainly be worth the sum which it will take to make it. If it should prove successful, the House of Representatives can adopt it, and it will save half of their time, which they may add to their hour turns of speaking; for it takes half an hour there to take the yeas and nays. The confusion which is incident to the taking of the yeas and nays by the present mode, can all be obviated. They can be taken in one minute, as well as in ten hours. The only trouble will be that the Clerk will have to read over the names after they have been recorded. If the proposition should meet the approbation of the Senate, I really think that it has never adopted anything for its convenience or for the saving of time, since it has been a deliberative body, that will be more effectual than the plan proposed. I do not wish to take it on myself positively to say so. Gentlemen have the same opportunity to examine the machine that I have. I act from the conviction that it is useful, necessary, and proper, and that it will be of great advantage, both in the saving of time and as a matter of accuracy. I move that the resolution which I offered yesterday on this subject be taken up for consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to contract with Henry Johnson, the inventor, for the construction in the Senate Chamber, of his new mode of taking the yeas and nays, provided the entire cost of the construction shall not exceed the sum of $1,500, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate."

Mr. BRIGHT. The resolution, I presume, must go to the Committee on the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT. Certainly. Under the rule adopted this morning, that resolution goes to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. HOUSTON. The resolution was introduced yesterday, and I suppose, according to the practice of the Senate, it can be taken up for consideration now.

The PRESIDENT. In the opinion of the Chair, it goes to the committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. Do I understand that the rule adopted this morning, has a retroactive operation? The resolution was submitted before the rule was proposed.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. HOUSTON. No, sir. I move that memorial be referred to the same committee.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion by Mr. SHIELDS, Thomas G. Clinton had leave to withdraw his memorial and papers in relation to the Potomac bridge.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

On the motion of Mr. MASON, the Senate again proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

VOTING BY MACHINERY.

Mr. BRIGHT, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred a resolution proposing to appropriate $1,500 to enable Henry Johnson, the inventor, to make an experiment, in the Senate Chamber, of his new mode of taking the yeas and nays, reported, by direction of a majority of the committee, the same back for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand that objections really exist in the Senate to this machine, and I shall be glad to hear from any gentleman those which he may entertain. I am satisfied that I can answer them to his entire satisfaction; I do not care what they are. I think it is so perfectly unexceptionable, and it has so many advantages to recommend its adoption, that I really think, if the Senate will reflect upon it, that they will not hesitate about it. I will remark, in the mean time, that it will not be so important in the Senate, where there are but sixty-two names to call, as in the House, where there are more than two hundred names. It will expedite business there, and will be a saving of at least one half the time which they consume. It will also enable them to dispense with their one-hour rule, and will give them an opportunity of speaking as long as they please. It will take the yeas and nays with equal accuracy as, and in a great deal less time than, the present mode. The majority of the committee indorse my opinion as will all who examine the machine. It will cost but $1,500 to make the experiment, and as gentlemen have objections to it, I should like to hear them.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I was in the minority of the committee on this subject. I cannot give a positive opinion as to this machine itself. It appears to me, however, that the delay occasioned by the present mode of taking the yeas and nays, which is a serious evil in the House of Representatives, does not exist here. If that body wishes to use this new method of taking its yeas and nays, I am disposed to let it do so, but I am not disposed to say that the Senate shall try the experiment for the benefit of the House of Representatives. One reason why I am opposed to this machine is, that sometimes a gentleman votes in the negative when he wishes to vote in the affirmative, and the reading over of the names in a hurry may not enable him to detect the erroneous vote. It is a sort of machinery that may be suitable to such a body as the House of Representatives where perhaps there is a great loss of time occasioned by the present method of taking the yeas and nays, but I think it is not such a one as we should have adopted in this body. I think that the inventor is an ingenious man. I wish to do nothing to injure his rising prospects, or in any way detract from his invention. I am in favor of promoting inventions, and am even willing to be humbugged to a moderate extent; and I never laugh at any attempt which is made at an invention. We live in an extraordinary age; and it seems to me that wonders will never cease. If Napoleon had listened to Fulton and not spurned him away, he might have been the conqueror of England. But such great results will hardly attend this invention. However, I do not wish to depreciate it. I believe the inventor is a meritorious young man. If he can only satisfy the House of Representatives, in which such a loss of time is occasioned by the present method of taking the yeas and nays, that it is advisable that his machine should be adopted there, I would like to see it carried into practice; and when the Senate becomes expanded by the creation of more States out of the immense territory which we are to obtain, there may be a necessity for it here, but at present I think there is none.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Senator from Iowa has very well stated some of the objections which exist, at least in my mind, to the adoption of the measure proposed by the resolution, but he has not stated all of them. Every innovation is clearly not an improvement. There are some things which should be done in the old way and in no other way. I am inclined to think that the taking of the yeas and nays is to be classed amongst them. It is suggested here by learned and able Senators as one principal reason why we should not adopt this machine, that it is clearly unconstitutional, as the Constitution recognizes but two ways of voting, viva voce or by ballot. I think it is clearly an innovation on the Constitution, if it is not unconstitutional in fact; and as is well suggested by my friend from Connecticut, [Mr. Toucey,] it may be an innovation upon such gentlemen as some who have been members of this body, because it will deprive them of the opportunity of speaking in the only way in which they were ever known to speak.

But, sir, there is another idea in relation to this matter which I beg to suggest to the Senate. I think on the whole it is ridiculous, and may well be treated as such. My friend who sits upon my right and my friend on my left are each to have a certain fixed key which, when touched, gives the vote yea or nay. They may give me authority to vote for them in their absence, pass their keys over to me, and I may use them as I thumb the keys of a piano, and who would detect it? The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Butler] suggests that a Senator might lose his key. That is very true; but each man is presumed not to lose, and wherever he is in the Chamber before the yeas and nays are taken, he must, when the vote is given, be in his seat; and I can imagine nothing more proper than to hear you, sir, in the place which you so well occupy arranging the Senate: "Senators to your places; are you all ready?" [Laughter.] It would be very much like an old militia training where, after getting the soldiers in order, you ask "Are you all ready;" and when all are ready then comes the word "Fire." The whole thing in my judgment is ridiculous.

As to making an experiment in the Senate for the benefit of the House of Representatives, I think it would be highly improper. Besides, I was long enough of that body to know that in this very calling of the yeas and nays lies one of the constitutional rights of its members. It is the right of a minority sometimes to consume the time of that House when, in the last stages of legislation, erroneous and objectionable measures are attempted to be forced upon them by a bare majority. I have been a member there, as I would be anywhere, to resist legislation of that kind, and resort to all constitutional expedients—the calling of the yeas and nays is one of them—to defeat it. The argument, that it is wholly inappropriate for us to undertake to try experiments for the House, is a sufficient answer to the proposition. I would not make the allusion to the Senate, nor would I make it disrespectfully to the House, but it is suggested by Senators here that it is very convenient, at least for some men, to know how others vote before they vote themselves; and if the voting is to be done by a mechanical process they will be deprived wholly of that privilege. Those men who follow file leaders will not know in which direction their file leader is going, and they might perchance vote ay when they meant no. That would be another great mistake. I repeat that I think the whole thing is really ridiculous.

Mr. MALLORY. The idea of taking the yeas and nays by machinery is not a new one. It is a very old one. Some eight years ago, a very ingenious friend of mine in Florida, invented a very curious and pretty machine for the purpose, and when he came here to obtain a patent, found that five days before, a patent had been issued to another man for a machine in all respects similar to and very nearly the same as his own. There are some twenty different machines now existing for the purpose, many of which I have examined. The one which we have now before us is particularly ingenious, and would no doubt accomplish the object, if it be designed that the Senate shall give up the practice of voting by voice and adopting that of voting by machinery; and if that practice be adopted, I apprehend it would be simply an entering wedge. You would be required to go on and give the vote by machinery, to take it by machinery, and to announce it by machinery. I do not see but that one could be done as well as the other.

The Senator from Maine, in the climax of his remarks, aptly said that the calling of the yeas and nays is one of the greatest safeguards of a minority. It is said by the Senator from Iowa that he has no idea of trying experiments for the House, as if the machine should be tried in a large body first. If it is to be tried at all, if there be any propriety in it, it should be in a small body, where the rights of the minority are not protected to such a degree, by the calling of the yeas and nays. But in the House of Representatives, where it is proposed to put a machine of this kind, they should by no means set aside the present practice, which is one of the greatest guards of the rights of a minority under our Government.

But, sir, how is it possible to detect the absence of Senators who are not disposed to do their duties to the country if this machinery is to be adopted, by which the power of voting could be delegated to one of the pages of the Senate? Certainly one of the pages could attend to it as well as the Senator himself, and certainly the most important matters of the body might be adopted with not six members of the Senate present. Now, it is not true, as has been suggested, that the losing of the key will deprive the Senator of the power of voting, because the key to the ingenious machine is simply to lock it up and prevent its use by others. But, if Senators choose not to employ the key, the machine would be open to any person. I apprehend, however, that it is exceedingly essential that the presence of a Senator should always be manifested by his voice; and it would certainly be dangerous to give him the opportunity of delegating the power of touching the machine and voting yea or nay.

But, sir, when an innovation of this kind is proposed—an innovation which is entirely new, in any legislative body on earth, the British Parliament, or anywhere else, I apprehend that some reason should be given for it. I apprehend that the constitutional method of voting, which has been pursued heretofore should be shown to be erroneous in some particular.

The honorable Senator from Texas, however, has given a very singular reason for the introduction of this machine, which is, that it will enable Senators to make more speeches. If there be anything that would deter me from voting for it, it would be that consideration.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Texas insists upon this matter, I shall move an amendment by way of economizing time to enable us to determine when we will have a vote, and how we ought to vote. I suppose the spiritual rappers could ascertain that for us in ample time, and if we were in an ante-room we should know when to be in our seats to record our votes. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. President, in voting I should like to hear the Senator's voice. Sometimes it is very earnest; at other times it gives a very faint assent or dissent. The mere tones of the voice have a good deal to do with my judgment, and I do not know that I should be disinclined to acknowledge it openly.

Mr. HOUSTON replied to the objections of Senators seriatim.

The question was then taken on the resolution, and it was rejected.

MESSENGER TO THE SENATE.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the following resolution, some time since submitted by Mr. BADGER:

"Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be authorized to employ Preston Starrit, as messenger, from the first day of April, and that during the recess he shall, under the direction of the Sergeant-at-Arms, take care of the Senate committee rooms, and perform such other duties as may be assigned to him."

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not know the person named in that resolution, nor do I know the object or necessity of it, but it has occurred to me that the appointing of messengers by resolution offered by this Senator and that Senator, disturbs the police of the Senate. I think we should intrust our police solely to the Sergeant-at-Arms. Let us provide how many messengers we shall have, and then put them under his charge, and hold him responsible. I know that heretofore when complaints have been made to the Sergeant-at-Arms, in relation to something that was wrong, he has told me, I have no control over that man. Some Senator takes a favorite, and puts him in by resolution; he is independent of everybody about the Senate; he is independent of the Senators; there is no mode of calling him to account, no mode of enforcing a compliance with rules. I dislike to interpose when Senators feel a personal interest in the matter; but really I am opposed to the system of appointing messengers by a resolution, and thereby relieving them from all responsibility to the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. SHIELDS. My impression is that the Sergeant-at-Arms would appoint this man if he had the power, and I think he ought to appoint him. He is an excellent man whom I would like to see appointed. I would prefer, therefore, to let the resolution lie over for the present, until I can see the Sergeant-at-Arms in reference to it and ascertain whether he can appoint him.

The resolution was accordingly passed over.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. WALKER's resolution to change the hour of meeting was considered and rejected.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON FRAUDS.

Mr. HOUSTON's motion to print ten thousand additional copies of the report of the Committee on Frauds and Abuses was considered but not disposed of.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein the doors were reopened.

EMPLOYMENT OF MESSENGERS.

Mr. BRIGHT submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That so much of any resolution or order of the Senate as provides for the employment of any person by name or otherwise, under the direction of the Sergeant-at-Arms, be repealed, and that such persons shall hereafter hold their employment by the same tenure as other messengers.

On motion the Senate adjourned until two o'clock to-morrow.

SATURDAY, April 9, 1853.

Prayer by the Rev. J. G. BUTLER.

On motion by Mr. PHELPS, it was Ordered, That William O'Brien have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

Mr. HUNTER submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee, consisting of two members, be appointed by the President pro tem. to wait on the President of the United States, and inform him that unless he may have further communications to make, the Senate will close this session at one o'clock on Monday next.

Mr. HUNTER and Mr. EVERETT were appointed the committee.

Mr. HUNTER subsequently reported that the committee had discharged its duty, and that the President had informed them that he had no further communication to make; he therefore submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President pro tempore close the present session by adjourning the Senate sine die on Monday next, at one o'clock.

THANKS TO THE PRESIDENT PRO TEM.

Mr. CLAYTON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the unanimous thanks of the Senate be, and the same are hereby, tendered to the Hon. DAVID R. ATCHISON, for the very able, dignified and impartial manner in which he has presided over the deliberations of the Senate during the special session now about to terminate.

MESSENGERS TO THE SENATE.

The following resolution, submitted yesterday by Mr. BRIGHT, was considered and agreed to:

"Resolved, That so much of any resolution or order of the Senate as provides for the employment of any person, by name, as messenger or otherwise, under the Sergeant at-Arms, be repealed, and that such persons hereafter hold their employment by the same tenure as other messengers."

CUSTOM-HOUSE AT SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. WELLER. I submit the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to transmit to the Senate a copy of the report made by Gilbert Rodman, of California, to the Department, upon the subject of the custom-house at San Francisco, California.

I ask for the consideration of the resolution at this time. I do not know whether it is necessary to make any remarks in reference to it. A report which was made, in 1851, to the Department, disclosed a number of frauds that had been perpetrated while the custom-house was under the control of Colonel Collier. That report was on the files of the Department; but the Secretary has informed us that it has been abstracted. The accounts of Colonel Collier, in the mean while, have been adjusted at the Department. The agent of the Government has supplied the deficiency by making out a draft of the report from the rough notes. That report has been placed on file, and my object is to get it laid before the Senate at once, as I am sure it will be if the resolution be adopted.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Subsequently a communication was received from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the report; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

MEXICAN CLAIMS.

Mr. SOULE submitted the following resolutions; which were considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Mexican Claims be authorized to file their report upon the matters submitted to their consideration after the adjournment of the Senate.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to receive said report and to have the usual number of the same printed.

Resolved, That the services of the clerk of said committee be continued for one month after the adjournment of the Senate.

MESSAGE ON THE FISHERIES.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the vote on the passage of the resolution on the 6th instant, ordering five thousand extra copies of the report of the Secretary of State relating to commercial regulations with foreign nations, was reconsidered.

The resolution was then amended by striking out "five thousand" and inserting "two thousand," and was finally passed.

PUBLICATION OF DEBATES.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by Mr. SEWARD on the 7th instant:

"Resolved, That the Secretary be authorized to procure the publication in the National Intelligencer of so much of the debates in the Senate during the last session of Congress as has not been already published in that paper, and to pay for such publication and also for the publication of speeches at that session already made in the Intelligencer, the sum of four dollars per column."

Mr. CHASE. I hardly suppose that the Senate feels inclined to debate that resolution at this time, and for the purpose of testing the sense in regard to it, I move that it lie upon the table.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I will inquire from the Senator from New York whether he intends to extend the operation of the resolution back to the first session of the last Congress or to confine it to the last session. If it is confined to the last session I will vote for it.

Mr. SEWARD. The last session of the last Congress.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I ask that it may be so modified.

Mr. SEWARD. Then I will insert the words "of the last" before "Congress."

Mr. CHASE asked for the yeas and nays, but they were not ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion to lay the resolution on the table, and there were—ayes 12, noes 13; no quorum voting.

The PRESIDENT instructed the Sergeant-at-Arms to invite in absent Senators.

The question was again taken, and resulted—ayes 9, noes 19; still no quorum voting.

Subsequently the vote was again taken, and it resulted—ayes 16, noes 16.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CHASE. I think it very desirable that the Senate and the country should understand something of the nature and history of this system of paid reporting before voting upon this resolution. It is with very great reluctance that I offer any remarks at this period of the session; and nothing but a sense of duty would constrain me to do it. I have, however, looked into this history, and I feel bound to vindicate before the Senate and the country the vote which I shall give against the resolution of the Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD.]

It is now some five years since the practice of reporting in the Union and Intelligencer commenced. It has cost, for the National Intelligencer, $30,428 54, and for the Union $49,123 18. It originated in a resolution adopted on the 11th of August, 1848. At that time, as is well known, the public printing was disposed of by contract. The contractors were not the publishers of either of the party papers at the seat of Government. They were not, I believe, connected with the political press in any form. It so happened that, from some cause, the organs of the two principal political parties were not very well supported by subscriptions; and it was, doubtless, a principal object of that resolution to supply the want of popular support by governmental patronage. It provided for the printing of the proceedings and debates of the Senate alone in the Intelligencer and Union, at the rate of seven dollars and fifty cents per column. It did not prescribe the quantity of matter which a column should contain. It generously left that to the discretion of the publishers of the papers. The only duty devolved upon the Secretary of the Senate was to ascertain the number of columns, long or short, wide or narrow, and to pay according to the number, at the rate of seven dollars and fifty cents per column.

This state of things continued until the commencement of the first session of the last Congress. At that time the publishers of the Intelligencer notified the Senate that they found the contract burdensome, and asked to be relieved from it. The ground of this step was understood to be that the publication of the debates of the Senate in full, and the abstract which it was necessary to give of the debates of the House, so incumbered their columns as to injure the circulation of their daily paper. It was a voluntary act upon their part. It was not called for by any action of the Senate. It was dictated by considerations of private interest. The paper was thereby left free to advocate the doctrines of the party to which the editors belonged, and to publish such matter, and such matter only, as they thought calculated to promote the interests of that party. Nobody could complain of that. It was all right and proper. The Senate acquiesced at once, and relieved the publishers from their contract.

At the last session of Congress both Houses elected the publisher of the Union printer to Congress, and fixed the rates of compensation. These rates, in my judgment, were not merely sufficient, but very liberal, not to say extravagant. I do not doubt that, with ordinary economy, under these rates, the publishers of the Union can make not simply ordinary profits, but an ample estate out of the public printing. I believe this opinion can be sustained by the judgments of practical printers.

Thus, sir, stands the case at this moment. The publishers of the Intelligencer have voluntarily declined to continue reporting under the contract, and the publisher of the Union has obtained the public printing; and therefore the whole reason which originally induced the Senate to contract for the printing of the debates in the two papers, has entirely ceased. There is now no argument, either of a party or of a public nature, known to me, which will at all justify the continued printing of the debates in full in either of these papers. And it should be remembered that the contract was in terms a temporary one. The resolution which authorized it, expressly declared that it was to continue only "until otherwise ordered by the Senate."

But let me proceed with this history. Soon after the printing of the proceedings and debates had been discontinued in the Intelligencer, a resolution was submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. NORRIS,] requiring the Secretary of the Senate to audit and settle the accounts of John C. Rives, the publisher of the Daily Globe, for printing the debates and proceedings, allowing him the same compensation as that paid to the publishers of the Union—namely, seven dollars and fifty cents per column. That resolution passed the Senate; and then we had, as before, two papers in the city printing our proceedings and debates, and at the same expense.

Now, sir, is there any reason which will justify the Senate in employing and paying these two sets of publishers and reports to do the same work? I can see none, even of a party character, so far as the Union is concerned. That paper, as I have shown, is amply provided for by the public printing. Still less can I see any so far as the Intelligencer is concerned, for that paper, for the very purpose of being left at larger liberty to promote party objects, and consult the taste of its readers, declined the contract.

And now I ask the attention of the Senate—and I hope my statement will attract the attention of the country also—to the expense of this printing our proceedings. Before the contract with the Intelligencer and the Union the printing of the debates of Congress was a private enterprise. Public patronage in the shape of large payments for reporting and publishing was not considered necessary to secure sufficient publicity for Congressional proceedings. The prospect of additional circulation was a sufficient stimulus to induce the publication of very full accounts of what was done, and of all the speeches of the members of either House, which the country desired to read. I refer those who would inform themselves on this subject to Niles's Register, to the Globe as published by Blair & Rives, and to the Intelligencer. The Register of Debates, published by Gales & Seaton, had, I believe, a very limited patronage by Congress; but the commencement of which has grown into a wasteful and extravagant system may be found, I think, in an order of the Senate passed in 1846, authorizing each Senator to subscribe for twelve copies of the Congressional Globe, at six dollars for the long session, and three dollars for the short session. This action of the Senate was followed the next year by an order of the House authorizing each of its members to subscribe for the same number of copies, and on the same condition. Three years later, in 1850, another order was passed by the House, authorizing each member to subscribe for twelve additional copies. This was before the passage of the Senate resolution of the last session, authorizing the publication of the debates in the Globe, at the rate of seven dollars and fifty cents per column. Let us see what was the amount of encouragement thus extended to the reporting and printing of Congressional doings and debates. Sixty-two members of the Senate received twelve copies each, which makes seven hundred and forty-four copies; and two hundred and thirty-three members of the House received twenty-four copies each, making five thousand five hundred and ninety-two copies. The subscription of both Houses, therefore, amounted to six thousand three hundred and thirty-six. Congress took six thousand three hundred and thirty-six copies of this publication. This was equivalent to a pretty large list of cash paying subscribers, and could hardly fail to make the publication profitable. Now, sir, if the worthy publisher of the Globe should think fit to discontinue it, (which I certainly do not desire,) does any man, can any man doubt that this public subscription, together with the certainty of private patronage, would induce competent publishers to undertake a similar work, and report the whole proceedings and debates as fully as they are reported now? And yet, as I have already stated, we are paying the publisher of the Globe, under the resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire, seven dollars and fifty cents per column for preparing the very work for which the subscription is made. The subscription amounts to $38,016 for the long session, and $19,008 for the short session. The amount paid under the resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire, since its adoption on the 29th January, 1852, is $23,433 78—say about $17,000 for the long, and about $7,000 for the short session. This is not all, for the House of Representatives, following the example of the Senate, has directed its proceedings also to be published in the Globe, at the same rate of seven dollars and fifty cents per column. I find upon reference to the appropriation act of August, 1852, that the sum of $21,000 was then appropriated to pay for reporting the proceedings of the House in that paper, and the further sum of $649 50 to a balance, for reporting and publishing during the preceding Congress. I also find in the deficiency act of the last session a further appropriation of $9,375 to pay for like services during that session. These, Mr. President, are considerable payments. This business of reporting even in a single paper is very costly. I am by no means certain that the practice improves the character of the debates. I do not know that it adds anything to the consideration of the Senate or the House with the country. I do not believe it does either. I think it a bad system. It makes it the duty of the reporter to set down every word uttered, no matter how trivial, how unimportant, or how ill-considered. It sends at vast expense much that is valuable, indeed, but much also that is worthless, and not a little that is worse than worthless, all over the country through these hired agencies. But, sir, if the system were good in itself, why employ more than one paper? Does not one cost enough? Is it not enough to pay some $38,000 in the way of subscriptions, and about the same sum for reporting and publishing for each proportionably for the short sessions? This looks a good deal like paying for publishing a book, and then buying the greater part of the edition. Is it worth while to pay more than one publisher?

In respect to the Globe we have gone even beyond paying for publishing and buying a large part of the edition. We have provided that the residue of the edition may be distributed free through the mails. No such advantage is enjoyed by any other paper in the country. It is a great advantage. The privilege of a free receipt in any section of the country however remote, is an inducement to subscription for the Globe, which must be decisive with every person who takes a paper for the sake of information in respect to Congressional proceedings. No man will take the Intelligencer or the Union to learn what is done in Congress, and pay postage when he can get the full reports of the Globe without paying postage. If the resolution of the Senator from New York should be adopted, will not impartiality require that the privilege of free circulation be given to both these papers?

Mr. President, I am not one of those who object to sustaining a party press by giving it the public printing, in the ordinary legitimate course of business. Those who represent the popular majority have a clear right to prefer in public employment presses or persons of like political opinions. But it is an abuse of power to promote party or personal objects at the expense of the public interest. Senators and Representatives are trustees for the country. We have no right to give extra prices to political friends rather than legitimate prices to political opponents. We are bound to regard sacredly the public interest; and in the disbursement of public money intrusted to our charge, to observe economy. I have shown beyond all controversy, I think, that no good reason of a party or public nature exists for the publication of Congressional proceedings and debates in the Union even—much less can any such reason be given for their publication in the Intelligencer. So far am I from being willing to extend the system, and now, after having substituted the Globe for the Intelligencer, under the circumstances I have described, to renew the employment of the latter, and thus pension a third paper upon the Treasury, and pave the way for the introduction of a third corps of reporters, that I would discontinue the employment of the Union. For one, indeed, I am ready to say that I would discontinue the system of paid reporting altogether, and leave the whole business to private enterprise. I have no doubt it would be a very sufficient and adequate substitute.

The resolution under consideration proposes to hire the publication of the debates and proceedings of this special session and the last session of the last Congress in the National Intelligencer. These debates and proceedings have already been published in two papers at large. All the papers in the country have laid before their readers such accounts of them as their conductors thought sufficient. The Intelligencer itself has done so. It has made its own selection. It has published such speeches as its able and accomplished editors had thought fit to publish. It has not excluded altogether the speeches of political adversaries. It has published such of these as its editors regarded as having enough of intrinsic merit to warrant their publication. Its course in this respect has been such as the established character of the paper and a proper regard for fairness required. It has fulfilled its whole duty in this respect. It has done all that could be reasonably asked of it. Why ask it to do any more? Why employ it to do any more? What is the object of this proposed republication from the Union and the Globe? What justifying, what plausible reason even, can be assigned for the large expenditure of public money which it will necessitate? A single reason only has been suggested. It has been said that the proposed republication in the Intelligencer will give wider publicity to the proceedings of Congress. Under the circumstances, this is hardly more than suggesting that a little additional circulation may in this way be obtained for a few speeches which had not merit enough to induce voluntary republication.

Mr. SEWARD. If the Senator will give way for a moment, I can perhaps save him the necessity of continuing his remarks.

Mr. CHASE. I prefer to go through with what I have to say. I cannot think, Mr. President, that the argument I have just referred to has any real weight with Senators. What, then, is the object? I hear it said that the proposed republication will not be profitable to the Intelligencer. The amount to be paid under the resolution will not, it is said, reimburse the expense which the proprietors of the paper would incur. The republication, then, in that point of view, is a favor to the Senate. What will be the consequence? Why, sir, at the next session you will be called upon to continue the publication of the debates and proceedings in the Intelligencer at the old rate. Taking the premises of the advocates of the resolution, I can see no other object than to reinstate the Intelligencer in the employment which it voluntarily declined. I am unwilling to take any step towards this result. But, sir, taking for granted that the suggested reason of this proposition is the real one, assuming that the true and only motive for bringing it forward and pressing it upon the Senate at the but of the session, when there is hardly a quorum present, is a patriotic desire to enlighten the people by placing before the largest possible number of readers our reported proceedings and debates, let me suggest a far better mode of accomplishing the object: order this republication in the National Era. Republishing in the Daily National Intelligencer our debates and proceedings, would be to spread them before some two thousand additional readers. If transferred to the Tri-Weekly they would reach four or five thousand more. Republished in the Era, they would reach twenty-eight thousand additional readers. I do not say that all the readers of either paper will read these reports. Indeed, I apprehend that very few persons find time or inclination to go through them in whatever paper they may be found. I only say that if the real object of the resolution is to place them before the greatest possible number of persons, the Era is the proper paper for the republication. That is the paper, if any, in which the public interest would require it; for it has by far the largest number of readers. I believe I may safely say that it has, at this moment, a larger number of subscribers than all other papers in the city put together. It has probably three times as many as the Intelligencer, and more than three times as many as the Union. This is certain, unless the circulation of those papers has increased considerably within eighteen or twenty months. Then there is another consideration at once pertinent and important: That class of American citizens who read the Era and act upon the principles which it promulgates and defends, is often spoken of here as wanting in liberal and enlightened patriotism and in proper devotion to the domestic institutions of the country. What could be more prudent or more benevolent than to give these numerous fellow-citizens of ours the means of correcting their errors by the perusal of the able and luminous speeches made here, in which the true political faith is illustrated and defended? Some of the speeches made by my friend from California, [Mr. WELLER,] might be extremely valuable in that point of view. It is possible that the great good to be anticipated from the circulation of sound doctrines among so many benighted persons might warrant a little stretch of patronage; I cannot say, however, that I would favor even that. I am content, upon the whole, that the readers of the Era shall be left to get their light as they get it now: to subscribe for such papers as they choose to subscribe for, and to correct their errors, if errors they contain, without the help of Congress. I only say that if the real object of the resolution is the widest and most beneficial diffusion of information in respect to debates and proceedings here, that object can in no way be so completely attained as by the republication of the reports of them in that paper, recommended above all others by its large circulation, and as highly as any other by the fairness and ability with which it is conducted. For myself, I repeat, I am against the whole system; I am against its perpetuation and extension, by the adoption of the resolution now before us. Instead of perpetuation and extension, I am for abolition. And I want to begin now. Before I take my seat, I mean to submit a motion to amend the resolution, by striking out all after the word resolved, and inserting an order to discontinue the publication of our proceedings in the Union after the present session. This will be a step in the right direction, and I have stated the reasons which make it especially proper that this step should be taken now. Hereafter, we may go further. For the present, I shall not object to the continuance of the existing system of reporting in one paper and by one corps of reporters. I shall, however, vote for its complete abolition if proposed by any other Senator, under the perfect conviction that the whole business of reporting may be safely left to private enterprise, and that everything said here worth repeating, will be reported.

I beg leave to submit the following amendment:

That from and after the present session, the publication of the proceedings and debates in the Union be discontinued.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

A message was here received from the President of the United States, by SIDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., his Private Secretary; and on motion by Mr. MASON, by unanimous consent, the consideration of the resolution was informally passed over, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

DEBATES OF THE SENATE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution in relation to paying the National Intelligencer for printing the debates of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no time to discuss many of the topics which have been dwelt upon by the honorable Senator from Ohio. I assure that Senator that he by his speaking has rather changed my mind. I was inclined to vote against the resolution. I am satisfied now that I ought to vote for it and against the amendment, because if the amendment be passed the effect of it will be to give to the Globe the monopoly, the exclusive privilege of spreading our debates before the country. If you dispense with the Union, the Intelligencer, and the Era, what is the result? The Globe is then the exclusive vehicle for spreading the debates through the country, and that of course will increase its circulation. I opposed the conferring of the franking privilege upon the Globe. I have opposed all this system of bounty. My judgment is that there ought to be no hired reporters, though on that point, when on a former occasion we discussed this subject, several distinguished gentlemen, Mr. Calhoun amongst the rest, differed from me. I know that very distinguished men who represented minorities, said that they had not fair play and would not have unless they had some way of throwing out their speeches in every part of the Union. At that time there was an organization almost systematic in its character to exclude southern speeches from northern prints, and when they did go to the North it was with comments which always destroyed their effect. Since that perhaps the people at the North have read the speeches made by southern men in the Senate—how far public opinion has been affected by it I know not—but the only way to reach the public mind—and I suppose public opinion is the tribunal by which this Government is to be controlled—is to throw out the debates impartially. So far from voting for the amendment limiting the circulation of the debates to the Globe and excluding the Union and Intelligencer, or confining it to the Globe and Union as is done at present, I see no reason why we should exclude the Intelligencer, which is an old paper, somewhat consecrated in my memory, for it was the first I ever saw, and I remember well carrying it from the post office. That was many years ago. I learned to read by its editorials; in 1812 and '13 I have been stirred by reading its columns, and I hardly ever see it now without having some associations called up with former and better times.

I shall vote for the proposition, and I shall vote for it distinctly upon the ground that I go for free, fair, and impartial discussion; and I am willing to make the Intelligencer one of the vehicles for throwing our debates out to the country, because I believe it to be a tolerably fair paper. At any rate it conducts itself with dignity. I do not think the Era ought to lose the simplicity of its character. Let it be confined to its own business. But I have no idea that a paper like the Intelligencer should be excluded when others are included. My judgment would be to have no official reporting, but to let the different papers take the debates and use them as they can. I know there are many who differ from me, and think that that mode would operate unfairly to the minority, and that in regard to public opinion the majority would have the advantage in the contest. I do not know whether it would or not, but if you give the reporting to one paper I go for the whole, that is for all fair papers, because I would not go for any mere partisan which had some idiosyncrasy in its temperament that would prevent its acting fairly.

Mr. RUSK. I was here when the present system of reporting was adopted. There was a good deal of discussion as to whether Congress should employ paid reporters to publish their debates. It was ascertained that under the old method which was pursued—that of each gentleman reporting his own speeches—constant mistakes were occurring as to what had been said by members, some of which were charged to have been wilfully made, and others arose from the difficulty of reporting, for it is a business which requires talent to make correct reports. The matter was a good deal discussed. One system was adopted and abandoned, and afterwards a committee was appointed, on the motion of the late Senator from Missouri, [Mr. Benton.] That Senator and myself were on the committee. We reported the present system of employing reporters. It is no speculation on the part of newspapers. We called before us practical printers, men on whom reliance could be placed, and also those who were familiar with reporting, and we settled the compensation at a fair living rate, which was seven dollars and fifty cents for reporting and publishing in the Union and Intelligencer. They complained afterwards, and I think with just cause, that it hardly remunerated them for the trouble and expense which they incurred. It is a pretty expensive business, for it requires a large corps of reporters, and a great deal of labor. Everybody knows the manner in which our debates have been reported under the system.

The Intelligencer, as has been stated, declined the business, and now I understand the resolution before us to amount to this: that for publishing the debates they shall be paid four dollars per column, striking off three and a half for the reporting. I am not prepared to say that it is not better to have but one corps of reporters, but I think it is not, for when there are two corps one acts as a check upon the other. At any rate as it now stands we are paying two establishments for the publication of our debates, the Globe and the Union. One of them is a neutral paper, while the other belongs to the party that is in the majority in the Senate and in the country. The Intelligencer, which is read by a large number of the opposite party, is excluded from publishing the debates, and its party is excluded from the benefit of reading them. I do not agree with the Senator from Ohio by any means, that this is a job for the printers; nor do I agree with him that there is such a vast deal of trash thrown out in the way of public speeches; and if it were so I think the further and wider it is published the better, because it will bring the people to the correction of the evil. I think the further and wider we extend the intelligence of our proceedings here, what gentlemen do and what they say, the better it is. It will have a salutary influence upon us, and according to my conception it will have a beneficial influence on the country.

What is the question before us? Here is the Democratic party, which is in the majority, paying one paper that is clearly a Democratic paper, and paying another, the editors of which everybody knows to be Democratic, although its editorials do not pertain to party matters, and we are asked also to pay the Intelligencer, a Whig paper, and one of the oldest in the country, and allow me to say, for I have read it a great deal, one of the fairest I have seen, when it comes to a statement of facts in regard to public men. I do not believe in the doctrines which it inculcates and advocates, but I have seen no unfairness in it in regard to public men. It is one of our oldest papers, and as the Senator from South Carolina has said, it is associated with earlier and, I agree with him, better days, when there was more principle and less patronage connected with parties than there is at the present moment. Now the question is are we willing to pay that paper for publication? We are not asked to pay for a corps of reporters. I hope we will do it. I hope the Senator from Ohio will consent to it. The Intelligencer is taken by a large number of highly respected people throughout the country. All the leading Whigs, all the old men, and a great many Democrats take it. I think it is nothing but right; I think it is but an act of justice; and, sir, I think it is but an act of magnanimity which I cannot find it in my heart to refuse.

Mr. WELLER. I did intend to say a word or two in reply to my friend from South Carolina, but as he seems to be in so witty a mood to-day, I am afraid of provoking a reply. [Laughter.] At all events, the safer course is to let him pass. However, I want to say a word or two in regard to this question. In my judgment, it is not a question of magnanimity at all. It is a question of justice. We who are in the majority here, have our debates published in the paper which is recognized as the organ of the Democratic party of the country. Now, I ask whether the Senators who are in a minority on this floor have not a right to have their views disseminated through the paper which they recognize as their organ? That is a matter of justice. I wish to say nothing upon this floor which I am not as willing should be read by the Whig party as by the Democratic party. Besides, if Senators who are in the majority will look at this question, they will see that by the publication of Democratic speeches in Whig newspapers they may reach Whig hearts and induce them to turn from the error of their ways and come into the Democratic party. How can Democratic Senators here who are daily enlightening the Senate upon the great principles which are involved between the political parties expect their learned discussions to reach the Whig heart unless they are republished in the Whig organs? Therefore, believing that the great body of that party stand in need of information, and that the readiest way of getting them enlightened upon these questions is to republish our debates in the Whig newspapers, I shall vote for the resolution; for, as I have said already, I believe it is but an act of justice. You have no right, because you are in the majority here, to select one of your party organs, and say that all the transactions of the Senate shall be published in it exclusively. There are a vast multitude of ignorant men in the country who are readers of the National Intelligencer, and other Whig papers, and who stand in need of information. [Laughter.] It is a matter of justice, as well as policy, that in dispensing your patronage, you should look to their interests as well as to your own political friends. If I were to select one paper in which to publish the debates, I would select the National Intelligencer, because the Democratic party is already sufficiently enlightened, [renewed laughter,] while the Whig party stands in need of information. How many Whigs, unless some provision of this sort be made, will ever read the learned speeches of my friend from South Carolina?—and he never speaks without displaying great ability, and oftentimes great wit and humor, which is sometimes considered by the people as more important than wisdom. [Mr. Butler rose, evidently desirous to obtain the floor.] Mr. President, I am really afraid of provoking my friend from South Carolina. [Laughter.] If I have not already done so, I will stop.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not like to be back-bitten to my face. [Laughter.]

Mr. WELLER. I have nothing more to say except that I shall certainly vote for the resolution. If you had taken the vote in the outset, I would have voted the other way—I believe I did. I was voting with some gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber [the honorable gentleman was standing on the side of the Chamber usually occupied by the Whig Senators] who think that all our debates should be published in the Democratic organ, and it struck me that this was an effort to give a little of the Federal patronage to a Whig newspaper, and on principle I would be as the Irishman said fore-nint that; but when I come to look at the question for myself, and apply the rules of justice by which I wish to be governed in all cases to it, I feel myself obliged to vote for it.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. For once, I find myself in Free-Soil company. I think the Senator from Ohio is right in the course which he has taken. As to the question of justice, I will say to my friend from California that when this thing originated, everybody said it was right to pay the Intelligencer as well as the Union, for the publishing of the speeches to go out pari passu. That state of things continued to exist just so long as the Intelligencer found it to be profitable to publish the debates. It very soon found that it was not profitable, and it thereupon notified us that it declined to continue the publication of them. A Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Norris] then offered a resolution to substitute the Daily Globe for the Intelligencer; and the question now is, the Intelligencer having thrown up its contract, and we having substituted the Globe in place of it, whether we will go on and pay a third paper for publishing our proceedings—that third paper having declined the expense of reporting and publishing them already. It seems to me that it would be clearly improper. As to what has been said of the character of the Intelligencer, I indorse it all. I regard it as one of the most respectable papers, and it is published by some of the most respectable gentlemen in the country. I do not know that I have ever seen it descend to scurrility. I regretted to see it throw up its contract. I wished to see it continued; and if our system of reporting is continued, I wish, not that the Globe shall do the reporting, but that the Intelligencer, at the beginning of the next session, when it may be willing to meet the expense, shall do it. I wish that the two party papers should continue the reporting. I am, with the Senator from Ohio, against the whole system. The amount that has been paid for it, shows that it ought to be discontinued. It is one of those expenditures which has grown up in late days, commencing no further back than 1846, which ought to be dispensed with. It will, like the system of extra compensation, go on increasing until paper after paper will come in and ask to be paid for publishing the proceedings, and the whole thing will go by the board. These debates can be obtained very easily now. Here is the Globe, or Appendix, which can be got for one dollar and fifty cents, with the speeches of every member of Congress. In addition to paying for the publication in the Daily Globe and Union, we pay for the publication in the Congressional Globe itself, and we have given to it the franking privilege throughout the whole country. Every time this thing comes up to get money out of the Treasury, it is made a question of disseminating information among the people—a question of enlightenment; and we have it now raised in regard to speeches which were made long since, and published in the Intelligencer to the extent to which it was profitable at the time, and to no greater extent. I shall vote against the resolution.

Mr. CHASE. If this were a simple question of magnanimity I might agree with the Senator from California, but I regard it as a question of public duty. I think that those who advocate economy in public expenditures, and the reform of abuses in the Government, have now a chance to show the sincerity of their faith by their votes. I have not said a word against the National Intelligencer. It is ably conducted. It is a staid, decorous, conservative, highly respectable paper. Conservatism is always respectable; progress is sometimes too earnest, too emphatic, energetic, to be respectable, in the conservative sense of the word.

But, sir, what have we paid already to this paper? We have paid the Union, under the resolution of August 18, 1848, $49,123 18. We paid the Intelligencer up to the time when it voluntarily discontinued its contract, $30,428 54. These are large sums. As the Senator from Iowa justly observed when the Intelligencer voluntarily discontinued its contract, we substituted the Globe for it, and the simple question now is whether we shall reinstate the Intelligencer in the employment which it abandoned and thus have three corps of reporters, and three printers at the next session instead of two. I have already said I am perfectly willing to give up the whole system as an unsuccessful experiment. I do not think it desirable to continue it at all; and I will go with any gentleman who may propose its abolition. But if we are to have a system at all, certainly we want but one corps of reporters. We do not want two; much less do we want three. Every Senator who looks at the reported proceedings in the two papers now employed will find frequent discrepancies. These are unavoidable when two distinct corps are employed. The reporters of both papers are as able and accomplished men as are to be found in their profession; none could do their work better. But what we want, if we want any reporters under the sanction of the Senate, is an authentic account of our proceedings by one responsible body of reporters, which will stand for all time, and which cannot be contradicted or varied by a reference to any other reports under similar sanction.

One corps of reporters will cost enough, as I have already shown. It will cost at least $50,000 for the Senate during the long sessions, and I do not know how much for the House.

The Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. Borland,] very well says that whatever may be the merits of a proposition to employ the Intelligencer in future, there is no propriety in paying for the republication of old debates already reported. Who believes that the speeches will be read, if we reprint them? The session has passed away: the interest in the debates has gone.

I think, Mr. President, that the whole system had better be discontinued, and that we had better make the beginning now. I propose to commence with the Union, because it is the paper which represents the majority in this Chamber, and for which the majority have sufficiently cared by giving to its proprietor the public printing. They have given him a fortune in that office, and I see no reason for making a larger addition to it, in the shape of compensation for publishing our proceedings.

So far as the dissemination of information is concerned, I have shown the Senate already that if you wish to place the speeches of Senators before the greatest number of readers, and especially if you want to correct opinions which most of the gentlemen here regard as heretical, there is another paper to which your regards should be extended—a paper which has a greater circulation than all the other papers in this city put together. Its readers are scattered through the whole country. It is read North; it is read South; it is read abroad; it is read by a class of citizens who, in the judgment of many Senators, especially need to be enlightened. If you are going to undertake the correction of Whig judgments by the republication of old speeches, is it not worth while to go a little further and try the efficacy of the process upon these Independent Democrats? A Senator near me seems to demur to this name. It is the right name. Other designations, I know, are more common here and elsewhere. They are most frequently used by those who fear the growing conviction among the people that the sincerest and deepest devotion to Democratic principles is found among the opponents of slavery, and that they are best entitled to the name of Democrats who most faithfully carry out the doctrines of Democracy. But if all this is a mistake, and these voters are indeed visionaries and errorists, why not give them the light of your debates? They go for too much reform. They go for too much progress. They are in too great haste, gentlemen think, to bring about the political millennium. Now, place your speeches before them. Correct their errors. Disabuse them of their false impressions. If you succeed as well as you seem to have succeeded with the Whigs, (for it is hard to distinguish one of the Baltimore platforms from the other,) what an era of peace and harmony and union we shall have!

Mr. President, the Senator from Texas [Mr. Rusk] takes exception to my remark, that a great deal of trash goes abroad under the name of debates and proceedings of the two Houses of Congress. I may have used too strong a word; and certainly I did not mean to characterize the speeches of Senators as trash. When Senators speak, I listen always with respect, often with interest and instruction. Many speeches made here are able, important, and permanently valuable. But who does not know, also, that much goes into their reports, which is of no value and no interest? How much that is trivial, how much that is absolutely frivolous takes place here and finds its way into the reports? I have no desire that all this should go abroad. It does not enhance the dignity of the Senate. I fear, indeed, that the reputation of this body has not improved in the judgment of the country since this system of reporting was adopted. If it be extended, if reporter be added to reporter, and printer to printer, and job to job, you may rest assured that it will go down under precisely the same public odium which has overwhelmed constructive mileage and extra compensation.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I move to amend the amendment by adding "and Globe."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected; and the question recurring on the amendment, it was rejected.

Mr. CHASE. I move to amend the resolution by inserting after the words "National Intelligencer," the words "National Era;" and on the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

On a division of the question on ordering the yeas and nays, only four Senators rose in its favor, and

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STUART in the chair) decided that they were not ordered.

Mr. CHASE. I ask for a count on the other side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think that necessary. It requires one fifth of a quorum to order the yeas and nays, and four Senators are not one fifth.

Mr. CHASE. I apprehend it is the duty of the Chair, whenever any Senator calls for a division upon any question, to have it. That application is not to be limited to the mere ascertainment of the existence of a majority in favor of any proposition. It requires a majority to carry a proposition. It requires one fifth of the Senators present to entitle the Senator who demands them to the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The opinion of the Chair is, that upon any question which requires a quorum to act upon it, it requires one fifth of a quorum to order the yeas and nays; upon a question which does not require a quorum to decide it, as to adjourn from day to day, one fifth of the Senators present can order them.

The question being taken on the amendment, there were, on a division—ayes 2, noes 24; no quorum voting.

Mr. RUSK. I hope the Sergeant-at-Arms will be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators. I do not like to see a thing defeated in this way.

Mr. CHASE. I am sorry that the Senator from Texas does not like to see this thing defeated in this way; but this resolution is supported upon the ground of placing information before people who need to be enlightened by Democratic speeches. Now, I only say that if this is the real ground of the resolution, consistency requires the selection of the paper which has the greatest number of readers, and that paper is the National Era. The resolution is also sustained upon the ground of courtesy to a minority. Now, undoubtedly the readers of the Era, I mean of course those who accept the political faith advocated by it, are in a minority. Possibly, at the present moment they are in a smaller minority than the Whigs.

A SENATOR. Are you sure?

Mr. CHASE. I rather think so. [Laughter.] There has not been a count since the late election, and I cannot be absolutely certain. We are increasing, and the Whigs are decreasing. [Laughter.] If, then, the argument of courtesy to a minority is good, why not extend it to that minority which is represented by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] and myself? I appeal to the magnanimity of the Senator from Texas. I know his generosity; I know his fairness. I do not see how he can gainsay this practical application of his own principles which I commend to him. I hope he will reconsider his position and award to the liberal, growing, independent Democratic minority the same courtesy which he is so ready to extend to our Whig friends.

Mr. WELLER. It seems to me that the Senator from Ohio has given a new name to the old Abolition party. Everybody knows, or ought to know that the party to which he alluded is the Abolition party. He designates it as the Independent Democratic party! I know of no such organization. And as to the Abolitionists, it is utterly impossible by the publication of any debates here to change the minds of the readers of the National Era. It would be casting "pearls before swine." Like Ephraim of old, they are "joined to their idols." We had better, therefore, "let them alone." [Laughter.] I am not disposed to give any consequence or importance to that newspaper by making it the publisher of any portion of the debates of the Senate. I know of no practical good which the publication in that paper can produce to the country. I cannot consent to encourage either directly or indirectly a press which advocates doctrines calculated to distract and divide the Union. That paper is the organ of a faction which has already done much to disturb the harmony of the States, and weaken the bonds which bind them together. The patronage of the Senate should not be so distributed as to aid in this unhallowed work.

All that I desire to say to the Senator from Ohio is, that I could not understand his assertion when, the other day, he claimed to be the representative of the great Democracy of Ohio! Does he suppose that the Democracy of that State will recognize that Abolition journal as its organ? Do they look into that paper for the purpose of finding their political creed? Do they examine it for the purpose of determining what the honor and justice of the country may demand from them? If, sir, they do, then, as I said upon another occasion, I was a false representative of that party in the memorable gubernatorial campaign of 1848. But now I am enabled to comprehend the Senator. The Independent Democratic party! Sir, there never has been any other party, known as the Democratic party, but the Independent Democratic party—a party that was founded upon principles—principles which they believed to be inseparably connected with the prosperity and happiness of the country. It was always independent, because it sought to stand aloof from all factions and all cliques, and to look with an eye alone to the well fare and happiness of the whole people—a party who have labored from the beginning to perpetuate the Union by securing to each section of the Confederacy the undisturbed enjoyment of its constitutional rights—a party who are content with the Constitution given them by their fathers.

If the Democracy of that great State have become abolitionized; if they have abandoned the safe and sound constitutional principles which they so zealously sustained in the olden times; if they have thrown themselves into the arms of a miserable faction, then the Senator from Ohio may claim to be their true representative. But, sir, such is not the fact, and therefore it was that I affirmed that he was not the representative of any portion of the Democracy of that State which I regard as sound. In sustaining the Abolition organ he surely does not represent them. I regard him as the exponent of a faction. I regard him as belonging to a clique—to a faction that has been organized for the purpose of destroying the peace and tranquillity of the Union; and if they succeed in carrying out their measures, the result must be the inevitable dissolution of the Government. I have been provoked, I grant I have been provoked, because he comes here and claims to be the representative of the Democracy of my native State, with which I was so long identified previous to my removal to the Pacific. That he should claim to be the representative of that Democracy, that he should claim that the views which he entertains upon all these political questions are the sentiments of those with whom I have spent nearly the whole of my life, and with whom I have battled in the fiercest contests known in the history of any State, has provoked me I admit. I have not lost my temper however, for I claim to be a good-natured man and not easily moved. I have endured this with a good deal of philosophy. I have sometimes felt myself called upon to speak, because I was the only native of Ohio upon the floor of the Senate; and if I could not be allowed to vindicate her reputation from what I considered the foulest aspersions, I could not tell to whom she would look for it. I repudiate now publicly the idea that the Senator from Ohio represents that portion of the party with which I was connected when I was a resident of that State. He may be the true and faithful representative of what is usually known as the Connecticut Reserve in Ohio. It is the hot-bed of Abolitionism, and the hardest place any democratic christian ever went into. [Laughter.] They are a peculiar people, a very remarkable people; and therefore I am free to admit that my friend from Ohio—for he is my personal friend, and I would not disturb a hair of his head—is their representative; but at the same time, I say in all courtesy, that he must allow me to repudiate the idea of his representing the Democracy of that State. In the name of the sound and true men of Ohio, I deny that he is entitled to this position.

Now, Mr. President, I do not know that I should have said anything upon this occasion or engaged in this unprofitable debate if it had not been for the fact that we have no public business to transact. I would not have been justifiable in imposing remarks of this character upon the Senate, if there had been any public business before us demanding action; but everybody knows that there is nothing for us to do. We are only waiting on the Executive for political victims. The Senator from Ohio has been speaking to-day with no other view perhaps than to spread his speech out in the columns of the Globe. I am willing that it shall go there; and whenever he makes a speech in the Senate, and gives me an opportunity to make a short reply, I will contribute a small amount towards its free publication in the National Era, in order that his constituents upon the Connecticut Reserve may have the opportunity of perusing it. They have a strong affection for me in that region. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHASE. The honorable Senator from California has shown his regard to the State of Ohio in one mode; I have shown mine in another. I was not born in Ohio. I went to the State in my boyhood, from New Hampshire. I identified my fortune with those of her people. I have witnessed, and so far as lay in my power, have contributed to her development and growth. She has become a great State. I am proud to be numbered among her sons. Her honor and prosperity are very dear to me. The Senator from California was born in the State; but he left it in the prime of his manhood, and became a citizen of California. He became a citizen of the State by accident—I by choice. I abide—he has departed. Departing, he left behind him many who regret his absence. His regrets on account of separation are probably mitigated by the reflection that he is no longer in any degree responsible for the action of "that abolition State."

Mr. President, the honorable Senator has said that the publication of these debates in the National Era, would be "casting pearls before swine." The honorable Senator seems to be learned in Scripture. He has studied it at all events so far as to be able to make a quotation; but I submit to the candid judgment of the Senator, whether, in point of fact, and so far as their intercourse with gentlemen here or elsewhere is concerned, the readers of the Era are more entitled to that designation than the readers of other papers, which I will not name. The readers of the Era are very numerous—perhaps not less than a hundred thousand. They constitute a pretty large proportion of the thinking men and women of the country. They are independent in their judgments—not apt to follow leaders, unless they know who they are and where they are going. They form their own opinions; and what is most wonderful, they adhere to them in a minority, just as firmly as when in a majority. It is this peculiar trait of fixed adhesion to their principles, which some persons, who desire nothing so much as to be in the majority, and dread nothing so much as to be in a minority, call fanaticism.

My friend from California and I have also different reasons for our different degrees of attachment to Ohio. He ran for Governor; he ran well; but he was beaten. I was a candidate for Senator, and was elected.

Notwithstanding my election he denies my right to represent the Democracy of the State. Now, I have never claimed to represent, in a strict party sense, that great and powerful organization which we know at home as the Old Line Democracy. I have acted with it when I could do so consistently with my known principles; but I have never abandoned my position as an Independent Democrat. I happen, however, to be the only representative the Democracy of Ohio has in this Chamber; and I will say, with whatever zeal and energy and fidelity the Senator from California has represented his constituents, he has not exceeded my devotion to the interests and the honor of mine. There are differences of opinion in Ohio. To some my opinions are doubtless less acceptable than those of the Senator from California. I do not think them the less sound on that account. They are mine—the result of my own examination and my own reflection. I am ready to defend them whenever assailed, wherever questioned.

The Senator has referred to some remarks of mine made lately in Executive session. I do not complain of this. What I say in Executive session I am willing to have repeated anywhere. But then, as now, instead of claiming to represent the organization known as the Old Line Democracy of Ohio, I distinctly disclaimed all right to speak for it as a member of the party, because while I sympathized with the vast majority of those fellow-citizens of mine in all their generous devotion to the union of these States, while I rejected as they did many of the doctrines and opinions promulgated at Baltimore as anti-Democratic and anti-progressive, I did not feel myself at liberty to go with them in support of the nominees of the Convention. I claimed for the faith and opinions of Ohio all the respect and all the deference which is accorded to the faith and opinions of Virginia; and I refused to support candidates nominated upon a platform constructed as if in the very wantonness of contempt for the settled convictions of the people of my State, and declared to be such by successive Democratic Conventions for the last five years. If voting for Convention nominees is all that is necessary to make a Democrat; if Democracy is nothing more than unreasoning and unreasonable devotion to organization without regard to principles or measures, I certainly make no pretension to the name or character. But, sir, if holding in deep reverence and with earnest faith the old maxims of Democracy; if belief with Jefferson that all men are created equal, and are entitled to equal rights; if an honest recognition of the duty of carrying out these fundamental principles into their practical application, resolutely and without reserve; if fearless advocacy of economy and reform of abuses at home, and generous sympathy with the oppressed abroad; if earnest endeavors to advance our country upon the line marked out by our forefathers to the great destiny which fidelity to American principles will assuredly secure for her; if devotion to the Constitution and the union of the States; if these elements make a Democrat, I claim to be as good a Democrat as any I see upon this floor. I shun no scrutiny of my political opinions or acts. I am quite willing to have my title to the appellation of Democrat compared with that of any other Senator. I should not be surprised if some who challenge my Democracy, were to come out upon such a comparison a good way behind me.

The Senator from California tells us that the party represented by the National Era is the Abolition party, and that this party is vainly endeavoring to appropriate the name of Democracy. Why, Mr. President, it is the party which was organized at Buffalo in 1848. The President has appointed a number of gentlemen who were of this party in 1848, to high stations, and the Senate has manifested its accustomed liberality and good sense by confirming these nominations. I do not know that these gentlemen have recanted anything they said in 1848. It is true that the gentlemen thus nominated and thus indorsed, resumed their positions last year within party lines, and have voted for the nominees of the Baltimore Convention. But, I repeat, they have not recanted their opinions of 1848. Now, the party which was organized in that year has ever since been known as the Free Democracy or the Independent Democracy. For one, I like the last designation best, because it expresses best my idea of the organization; but I care little which is used. Certain it is that by one or the other the party has always been distinguished in the resolves of its public meetings and the proceedings of its convention. The great body of voters who compose this organization, and whose numbers increase from day to day, claim to be Democrats, because they hold in good faith all the cardinal maxims of the Democratic faith, and insist on their impartial application to all questions. They call themselves Independent Democrats, because they reject the dictation of the slave power. Courtesy and fairness, one would think, require that they be called by the name under which they choose to be known. If Senators, however, think proper to persist in calling them Abolitionists, it will do no harm. Mere names are of little consequence. Gentlemen may call me an Abolitionist if they choose, and I will promise not to be at all angry. The name would simply identify me in sentiment and opinion with some of the greatest and best men which ever lived, both of our own and other lands. It need not at all surprise gentlemen if that very name which they apply as a brand of reproach, should become, at no distant day, a crown of honor. I prefer, however, to designate the political organization of the opponents of slavery extension and nationalized slavery by the name which they assume for themselves. They will not find it difficult to establish their title to the name of Democrats, by any test which does resolve Democracy into a blind and servile adherence to organization without regard to principles. Here sit around me gentlemen who call themselves Democrats and representatives of the Democratic party of the country. I do not challenge their title to the name or character. I find myself generally voting with a majority of them; but how very wide are their diversities of opinion! There is hardly a question upon which they do not differ. There is perhaps no question upon which I do not vote with the majority of them as often as any one of themselves. Even upon that question which seems to rise up everywhere with a sort of omnipresence, challenging investigation and solution, how little agreement is there! Sir, there is no question of principle, there is no measure of policy upon which the Senators who compose the Democratic majority in this Chamber are unanimous. They agree absolutely in nothing except in supporting the same candidates for President and Vice President, in other words, the same dispensers of the vast patronage of the Government. And has it come to this, that in the nineteenth century, and past its noon, that a party organization is maintained upon the sole ground of organization and the support of convention nominations, and not by its recognition of any great universal principles applicable to the solution of all questions, and boldly applied in the solution of all? Sir, you may depend upon it that if this be so, the dead level of political stagnation has been reached, and that the great Democratic party which was organized under Jackson, is hastening to its decay and dissolution. The very moment the people become convinced that a great permanent comprehensive principle does not lie at the base of your action, animating, controlling, and directing it all, you will lose the confidence of the people; and when the confidence of the people is gone, the date of dissolution will not be distant.

Mr. WELLER. The Senator from Ohio is very much mistaken in supposing that I cherish any unkind feelings towards his constituents, because of my having been a defeated candidate for Governor in 1848. The history of that campaign is well known to the country. It was the only occasion in that State when the Abolition party did not unite upon a candidate of their own. I was so odious to them and their principles, that they united upon my opponent, and with the union of the Abolitionists and the Whig party they beat me some three hundred votes out of a popular vote of three hundred thousand. If I had remained at home and concealed my views upon the "Wilmot proviso" from the public eye, I should have succeeded beyond all doubt. This I well knew at the time, but I traversed the whole State and proclaimed my opinions fully and freely everywhere, preferring defeat to a dishonorable victory. I would scorn to hold any office by concealing my principles from the people.

But the Senator says that that election which resulted in my defeat placed him in the Senate. I know exactly how he was elected, and I should have supposed he would scarcely boast of such a victory. I understand the history of that election. The Senator had some three or four Abolition friends in the Legislature who held the balance of power between the Whig and Democratic parties; they had the power to control the action of the Legislature; they exercised it. They required an agreement as to the officers to be selected before an election for Senator could be had. They required them to enter into a bargain; and if he will allow me to say—and I say it with all proper respect—a dishonorable bargain; for it is a dishonorable bargain when a great party gets down upon its knees to some faction, and agrees to parcel out the offices. It was indeed humiliating to see a great party placed in this position. They were compelled, therefore, to go over to these three or four who were adhering to the Senator from Ohio. It was by a combination, an unhallowed combination between the Democracy of that day and the Free-Soilers that elevated the Senator to the place he now holds in this Chamber. If that be a matter for my friend to boast of, while he reminds me of my defeat, he is entitled to all the glory resulting from it. By such means I too could have succeeded. One word of conciliation to the Abolitionists, and I would have been Governor. I was beaten, but not disgraced. In the last campaign in Ohio he attached his fortunes to John P. Hale, and sustained him and his political platform. He utterly "repudiated and spit upon" the Baltimore platform. He could not support General Pierce, because he was nominated upon a platform which, in his judgment, destroyed all those principles which were dear to the Abolition heart. How many votes were cast along with that Senator in Ohio? Some thirty thousand. In the meanwhile the great Democratic party of that State recorded their votes in favor of General Pierce, thereby ratifying, confirming, and sanctioning the Baltimore platform. Does he represent the Democracy of Ohio? The Democracy of Ohio are content to take General Pierce with his principles as avowed by the Baltimore Convention; but the Senator utterly repudiates that, and that portion of the people backing him in his repudiation were thirty thousand, while the majority for General Pierce were, in the whole State, some eighteen thousand or twenty thousand. Therefore I had a right to assume that the Senator from Ohio did not represent the wishes of the people there, when some three hundred and fifty thousand votes were cast in that campaign, and the whole number who acted with the Senator was only thirty thousand. Therefore he represents thirty thousand, a large portion of whom are in the Connecticut Reserve. He is the exponent of their principles, and not the principles of the Democracy. He directed all his efforts to defeat General Pierce; he denounced the sentiments of the Convention which nominated him, and now he claims to represent the Democracy of Ohio! Is not such a claim absolutely ridiculous?

The Senator has said, too, that the Democratic party at the present session have indorsed some of the unrecanting Free-Soilers of 1848. When? The Democratic party, with that manliness and independence which I trust will always characterize them, avowed their principles through the Baltimore Convention to the world: they desired no man to take their candidate; they sought no concealment; they desired no one to take their candidate with a "generous confidence"—without the platform. They proclaimed their principles; they inscribed them upon their banner; they placed that banner in the hands of their candidate; they were so plainly written, that he who runs might read, and a wayfaring man, though an Abolitionist, need not err therein. [Laughter.] This was fair and manly upon our part. No man was called upon to sustain our candidate, unless he cordially, sincerely, and heartily responded to the principles incorporated in the platform. A very large majority of the people whom the Senator pretends to represent, did respond to them; and all of those men who were confirmed by the Senate of the United States who went with the Free-Soil party in 1848, came in at that contest, and gave in their adhesion to our principles by voting for our candidate; and all that we have said, therefore, in the ratification of the nominations alluded to, is that those who came back, and in good faith subscribed to our principles and supported our candidate, were entitled to a share of the Federal patronage. There has been no man confirmed who would dare to avow to the world the political principles which actuate the Senator from Ohio. Has an Abolitionist been confirmed—any of those who united with him in the last contest? Not one of them. Has any of them been sent in by the President of the United States? No, sir; and they never will. The President has no sympathies with the faction to which the Senator belongs.

The Senator says that this Administration has taken men back into the Democratic party who have never abandoned the principles of the Buffalo platform of 1848. Sir, we judge them by their action. When they support our candidate and our principles fairly and manfully, we have a right to assume that they have seen the error of their ways, and have come back into the Democratic party. They could not support General Pierce without indorsing the principles upon which he was nominated. To proscribe a class because of their offenses of 1848, would be manifestly unjust. Wise men change their opinions; fools never do.

Now, Mr. President, I did not desire to have said anything in this discussion. I should not have been provoked to enter into it but for the repeated remarks of the Senator from Ohio, to the effect that he represents the Democracy of that State. With all respect to him, I claim that I am a much better representative than he is. In the last canvass in that State, it gave a large majority for the man whom I voted for, and who stood upon the principles I avowed; therefore I have a right to claim to be a better representative of the Democracy of that State than he is. When I come to analyze principles I am not willing to regard him as anything else than an Abolitionist. I have so regarded him from the beginning. I have known him in olden times. I have known him when he was canvassing the State in a hopeless minority, as he always will be in Ohio, for there is a vast amount of intelligence there, particularly off the Connecticut Reserve. [Laughter.] There will always be a majority there against the principles he avows; and you will never find in that goodly State a majority who will be willing to indorse the sentiments which have been oftentimes expressed here upon a particular question by the Senator who is accidentally here now.

Mr. President, I have said perhaps more on this subject than I ought to have said, but there are particular reasons why I have felt myself called upon to vindicate the character, and the honor, and the truth of the Democracy of Ohio. I owe them a deep debt of gratitude for the manly firmness with which they sustained me in one of the fiercest battles ever fought. Although I have found a home in a far distant land, I can never forget the brave and gallant spirits who gathered around me in 1848. I never can desert them.

In a social point of view, I should be sorry, sir, to lose the Senator from Ohio; but unless he abandons his errors and renounces his heresies, his political days are numbered. It is not probable that a contingency will ever occur again when a great political party will be willing to throw itself into the hands of a few Abolitionists, and sacrifice principle in order to obtain place. It is not often that such things occur, and therefore I count with a good deal of certainty upon the fact that, in two years from this time, the place that now knows him will know him no more forever. [Laughter.] He will go into the shades of private life, where he can have an opportunity of reflecting upon the errors of his past life. He will have ample time to show his philanthropy by devising some plan to improve the moral and political condition of our black population. His philanthropy takes in the whole family of man, black and white, and in retirement he may be able to do something to immortalize his name. I am sure his heart is right, but his head is awfully turned. There is evidently something wrong in that region. [Laughter.] He is obstinate; and having started wrong, the further he goes the worse it is. If he will repent in sackcloth and ashes, if he will renounce his errors, and promise to walk for the future in the path of Democracy and truth, we will allow him to take a place amongst us. I have some hopes of him, for

> "While the lamp holds out to burn,
> The vilest sinner may return." [Laughter.]

Mr. CHASE. This discussion, so far as it has assumed a personal character, is certainly not of my seeking. I have no disposition, however, to shun any responsibility which it may impose. It commenced in an effort to give a portion of the public patronage to the National Intelligencer, for no reason under the sun, that I can see, except to show the magnanimity of the majority in this Chamber towards the political paper of a minority. It seems to terminate in a discussion of the action of political parties in Ohio, and of some personal matters which concern myself.

The Senator from California has thought proper to refer to the local politics of my State, and to the events which resulted in my election to the seat which I now hold. And now let me say to him, and to all who concern themselves in these things, that so far as I have had any share in any political action in Ohio, I stand ready to meet the fullest and the most searching scrutiny. Sir, I have no political secrets. My public life has been so plain, so open, that he who runs may read its record. No man can truthfully say that I have ever deviated, upon any occasion or under any influence, by the breadth of a hair, from the path which fidelity to my long-cherished principles required me to pursue. It is true that I have acted in a minority. The time has been when I have stood almost alone. Some years ago, when I first promulgated those political principles which have ever since determined my action, I found few sympathizers or supporters. But I knew these principles to be sound. I believed them to be important; and I did not shrink from their defense then any more than I shrink from it now when their abstract correctness is generally admitted, and their practical application is resolutely demanded by tens of thousands of voters at the ballot-box. And let me say to gentlemen that they are indulging a vain dream if they fancy that these principles are to die out of the hearts of the people. They will go on conquering and to conquer. You may depend upon it that the faith of freedom is neither dead nor dying. You may depend upon it that it has lost nothing of that vital energy which has already overcome so many prejudices and changed so many convictions. The advocates of that faith shrink from no discussion. They desire it rather. They court investigation. They challenge scrutiny. They know that the more their principles and measures are examined and scrutinized the more they will commend themselves not only to the warm and generous affections, but to the sober and deliberate judgments of the American people.

And now, sir, let me further say that there is nothing in the circumstances of my election which I desire to withdraw from scrutiny here or elsewhere. The Senator from California may, if he sees fit, stigmatize the action of the Old Line Democratic members of the Ohio Legislature—and every one of whom, by the way, had just before supported him for Governor—as dishonorable. I never thought it so. There happen to be two Democratic parties in my State. The political platforms of both are substantially the same; but one insists upon the national recognition and adoption of its principles as the condition of support to national nominees; the other has hitherto supported national nominees without any such condition. The former is known as the Independent or Free Democracy; the latter as the Old Line Democracy; and many who act in the Old Line hold the State platform very cheap, and sympathize strongly with those who are known in other States as Hunkers; there are more, however, with whom the principles of the State platform are a cherished faith, and who of course sympathize more strongly with the Independent Democracy. Some two years ago, when no national election was pending, when the Old Line Democracy was in opposition to the National Administration, and of course not responsible for any proslavery action, many of the Independent Democrats, myself among them, supported the Old Line nominations. At this election, the Old Line ticket was elected by a large majority over all opposition. Upon no other occasion, for many years, has the Old Line State ticket received an absolute majority.

A SENATOR. How was it at the last presidential election?

Mr. CHASE. The Independent Democrats unanimously supported their own ticket, and the Baltimore nominees lacked fifteen thousand votes of an absolute majority. Well, sir, there has been in New York a union of the Barnburners and Hunkers; and no small pains is taken at the other end of the Avenue, and at this, to cement and consolidate this union. We have witnessed a pretty careful distribution and adjustment of the offices with this view. How the attempt to harmonize these discordant elements by the potent influence of patronage will succeed, I cannot say. But we know it is made, and we know too that it is the most common thing in the world, when two parties, or two sections of one party, having some common objects, unite to form a majority over a third party hostile to these objects, to divide the offices which that majority has to fill between the sections which compose it. Now, it so happened that in the Legislature of Ohio, in 1848–'49, no party had a majority; the Independent Democrats were, it is true, few in number; but the Old Line Democrats, though more numerous, were not numerous enough to effect anything by themselves. Under these circumstances that which was most natural took place—the Independents and Old Line Democrats united. But there was—and I am proud to say it—no sacrifice of principle on either side. The Old Line Democrats voted for me because they knew me to be sound in the Democratic faith, though independent in party action. The Independent Democrats voted for Old Line nominees for supreme judges, who, though they differed from them in party action, yet shared their general opposition to the extension and nationalization of slavery. Let the Senator make all he can of this. I see nothing in it to lament. I can appeal confidently to my whole course here to justify the confidence reposed in me. Nothing has transpired in the history of either of the eminent gentlemen elected to other offices at the same time, to make Independent Democrats regret the votes they cast for them. Many members of the Legislature who participated in these elections have since received distinguished proofs of the public confidence; and a succession of Democratic victories instead of the succession of defeats which had for years marked the previous history of the Democratic party, has attested the wisdom of the Old Line Democrats who recommended, or adopted, or approved the union.

Sir, I do not so highly value a seat here that I would sacrifice one jot or tittle of my personal independence to obtain or to retain it. Nor would I surrender any political principle to come or to remain here. The prophecy of the Senator from California may be fulfilled. It is very possible that I may not be reëlected. I shall have as little to regret in that event as any man. I am entirely willing, whenever the people of my State indicate that such is their pleasure, to retire from the scene. I have said on another occasion, and to my Democratic constituents, that a private is not less acceptable to me than a public station. I said it sincerely and honestly. I have ever preferred—and all the acts of all my life will prove it—action with a minority in defense of principles, to action with a majority, and to any position which a majority can confer, in disregard of principles.

I have said that I represent the true sentiments of the people of Ohio. I have never said that I represent a majority party organization. The Senator from California tells us that he has been provoked by my claim to represent that Democratic party in Ohio which voted for him as Governor. I have never made any such claim. If he has been provoked, he has been provoked without occasion. I have never assumed any other position than that which I take now. I represent Ohio—the people—not a mere party organization. I have no doubt at all that my political principles are the political principles of a large majority of that people, however their expression may be restrained or modified by party policy. There is not, for example, a sentence in the whole platform of the Old Line Democracy from which I dissent. I have maintained its principles, and have defended its policy every time I have addressed my constituents in whatever part of the State. I shall continue to do so. All I ask of the Old Line Democracy of Ohio is to carry out inflexibly and without reserve the principles of their platform. The chief, if not the only point of difference between me and them, is that I cannot consent, for the sake of party union and a party victory, to support national candidates who reject those principles—the nominees of a Convention who trample upon and spurn them.

I know just as well as the Senator from California that those who concur in the support of candidates nominated upon a platform, are generally supposed to unite in approbation of it. But I know also, and the Senator knows just as well as I do, hat thousands and tens of thousands of voters in nearly every northern State, while they supported the candidates of the Baltimore Convention, repudiated the Baltimore platform. I could not adopt this course. I felt that it gave a sort of right to the supporters of the platform to say to its opponents, "By supporting the candidates you adopted the platform. You are now bound by it, and must acquiesce in it." I was unwilling to place myself in any such position.

The Senator says, also, nobody has been appointed or confirmed who has not acquiesced in the platform. But how acquiesced? Virtually, only by support of the candidates nominated upon it; not by any public declaration of changed opinions. When and where did John A. Dix recant any of his opinions avowed in 1848, when he and I went together in support of the same candidates? When and where did he give in his adhesion to the Baltimore platform of 1852? I refer to this distinguished gentleman—distinguished every way, by his talents, by his acquirements, by his personal worth, and by the high place he occupies in the regards of the country—as the representative of a class. They are all claimed as supporters of the platform because they voted for the nominees; and this, too, notwithstanding the open declarations of many of them that, while they supported the candidates, they utterly rejected the doctrines of the Convention.

I did not choose to afford any pretense for such a claim in respect to myself. I preferred to take position with that minority of which the Senator has spoken, and which he says will always remain a minority. Let him not, however, deceive himself on this point. No future event is more certain, in my judgment, than that the principles of this minority will become the principles of a majority of the American people.

Mr. RUSK. When will it be?

Mr. CHASE. I cannot tell; but if you will observe the great and constant increase of the numbers of their consistent supporters, and the still greater change which has been going on in public sentiment in favor of these principles, you will be satisfied that it is nearer at hand than some gentlemen would willingly believe.

But I will pursue this subject no further. I have already detained the Senate too long. I regret the necessity of saying anything upon these subjects; but it was a necessity. It was impossible for me to leave unanswered the observations of the Senator from California, though nothing was further from my expectation when I entered into this discussion than a debate of this nature. I rose at first, as I said at the beginning, from a sense of public duty, to oppose the resolution of the Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD.] I oppose it as bad in principle and bad as a precedent. It proposes a large and useless expenditure of public money. It proposes to extend and perpetuate a bad system. And an effort is made to force this resolution through at the very close of a special session, when it is almost impossible to obtain a quorum to do any business. I resist it. I think it wrong; and I hope to find a majority of the Senate, should the resolution ever be brought to a vote, of the same opinion.

Mr. BRODHEAD. This is a very thin Senate. There must be a very large majority in favor of the resolution; but still, if the Senator from Ohio insists on a division, we had better understand it now, and adjourn if we cannot muster a quorum. I think myself that we had better pass the resolution to give four dollars to the Intelligencer for what they have published, and will publish, of the debates of the last session. The most of the speeches have been published, and there are but few to be published; and I therefore hope that, by general consent, we will pass the resolution now.

Mr. CHASE. I will say in reply to the Senator from Pennsylvania, that my deliberate judgment is, that it is not right for the Senate to pass resolutions involving a large expenditure of public money without a quorum. I cannot, for one, consistently with my views of public duty, permit it.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I think it is generally known that I am on the side of economy; but this will not take a large expenditure of public money. There are certainly Senators enough here to adopt the resolution, and there is a large majority of those who are present in favor of it.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, moved that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question being taken on Mr. CHASE's amendment to insert "the National Era," resulted—ayes 2, noes 19; no quorum voting.

Mr. WELLER. It is evident that there is no quorum present, and we are completely within the power of the two Senators. If they choose to insist upon a division the division will result in a disclosure of the fact that we have no quorum. It is a deliberate attempt on the part of those two Senators to defeat this resolution, or force the National Era into the patronage of the Senate. There is no difficulty in comprehending that this is the determination of the Senator from Ohio; and under the rules of the Senate, if he persists he can succeed in his object. I have no difficulty in understanding it, because he has said that his course is so plain that he who runs may read, but I think that in his case, he who reads will run. [Laughter.]

Mr. SEWARD. I introduced this resolution and I am happy to see that it commands the support of so large a majority of the body. It is embarrassed by a proposition, whether intended or not, to give to the National Era the printing of the debates of the Senate. I would at all times give such a proposition, if it were presented independently before us, my support, but inasmuch as the pressing of it now is embarrassing the resolution, and as there is no quorum present, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CHASE. I will merely say one word. It is supposed by some Senators that if the motion to insert the National Era should prevail, I will vote for the resolution. I have already declared the principle on which I proceed. I should not vote for the resolution if this amendment was inserted, but upon the same principles which commend the Intelligencer to the vote of the Senate I say the National Era ought to be included; but still if the resolution were so amended I should vote against it.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate adjourned.

Prayer by the Rev. J. G. BUTLER.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

RESIGNATION OF A SENATOR.

The PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communication; which was read:

WASHINGTON, April 11, 1853.

To the President of the Senate:

SIR: Having signified to the President my acceptance of the high functions he was pleased to confer on me, I now advise you that I cease from this day to be a member of the august body over which you preside. May I request that you will accept for yourself and tender to the other members of the Senate the expressions of my regret at parting from such associates, and my wishes for the prosperity and happiness of you all.

Your very humble servant, PIERRE SOULÉ.

ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDENT said: GENTLEMEN: Before the Senate adjourns, I desire to return my thanks for the very kind and complimentary resolution unanimously passed on Saturday last, and to assure the Senate that so long as I shall have the honor of continuing Presiding Officer, my highest ambition will be to retain the personal regard and confidence of my colleagues. In pursuance of the resolution adopted on Saturday last, I now declare the Senate adjourned sine die.

LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES.

OF THE

UNITED STATES,

Passed at the Second Session, which was begun and held in the City of Washington, in the District of Columbia, on Monday the 6th day of December, 1852, and ended on Friday, the 4th day of March, 1853.

MILLARD FILLMORE, President; WILLIAM RUFUS KING, President of the Senate pro tempore till the 20th December, 1852, when he resigned, and DAVID R. ATCHISON, was chosen in his place; LINN BOYD, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PUBLIC; I.—An Act making an appropriation for bringing to the seat of Government the Votes for President and Vice President of the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a sum not exceeding twenty thousand dollars be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of the sums due by law to the several messengers of the respective States, as compensation for conveying to the seat of Government the vote of the Electors of the said States for President and Vice President of the United States.

APPROVED, December 16, 1852.

PUBLIC, II.—An Act to amend the act approved the thirty-first August, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, in reference to the appropriation for continuing the survey of the Mexican Boundary.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purpose of continuing the survey of the Mexican boundary, it shall be lawful to use so much of the appropriation provided by the act approved thirty-first August, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, entitled "An act making 'appropriations for the civil and diplomatic ex-'penses of the Government for the year ending the 'thirtieth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, 'and for other purposes," as may be required in running and marking said boundary under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, on the Rio Grande, below the town called "Paso," and in defraying any necessary expenses heretofore incurred, or that may hereafter be incurred, connected with said survey.

APPROVED, December 23, 1852.

PUBLIC, III.—An Act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue Registers to Vessels in certain cases.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized to issue a register or enrollment for any vessel built in a foreign country whenever such vessel may have been, or shall hereafter be, wrecked in the United States, and have been, or shall hereafter be, purchased and repaired by a citizen or citizens thereof: Provided, That it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that the repairs put upon such vessel shall be equal to three fourths of the cost of said vessel when so repaired.

APPROVED, December 23, 1852.

PUBLIC, IV.—An Act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish the Territorial Government of Oregon," approved August fourteenth, eighteen hundred and forty-eight.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Oregon be, and hereby are, authorized in all cases where the sixteen or thirty-six sections, or any part thereof, shall be taken and occupied under the law making donations of land to actual settlers, or otherwise to cause the county commissioners of the several counties in said Territory, or such other officer or officers as they shall direct, to select, in lieu thereof, an equal quantity of any unoccupied land in sections, or fractional sections, as the case may be.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That when selections are made in pursuance of the provisions of the first section of this act, said lands so selected, and their proceeds, shall be forever inviolably set apart for the benefit of common schools.

APPROVED, January 7, 1853.

PUBLIC, V.—An Act granting to the Sackett's Harbor and Ellisburg Railroad Company the right of way through the military reservation at Sackett's Harbor, New York.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the right of way through the public lands of the United States lying in the village of Sackett's Harbor, in the county of Jefferson and State of New York, be, and is hereby, granted to the Sackett's Harbor and Ellisburg Railroad Company: Provided, That, in the opinion of the President of the United States, such grant be not injurious to the public interest, and that the location shall be approved by the President as to the position and width of the said railroad: And provided further, That if the said railroad shall not be completed within two years, or if at any time after its completion the said railroad be discontinued or abandoned, the grant shall cease and determine.

APPROVED, January 7, 1853.

PUBLIC, VI.—An Act making further appropriations for the construction of Roads in the Territory of Minnesota.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums of money be, and they are hereby, appropriated for the construction of roads in the Territory of Minnesota, in addition to the sums heretofore appropriated for the same objects, by the act approved July eighteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty, to wit: For the construction of a road from Point Douglass, on the Mississippi river, to the falls or rapids of the Saint Louis river of Lake Superior, by the most direct and convenient route between those points, twenty thousand dollars; for the construction of a road from Point Douglass to Fort Gaines, now Fort Ripley, ten thousand dollars; for the construction of a road from the mouth of Swan river, or the most expedient point near it, north or south of said river, to the Winnebago agency at Long Prairie, five thousand dollars; and for the construction of a road from Wabashaw to Mendota, five thousand dollars; and for the survey and laying out of a military road from Mendota to the mouth of Big Sioux river, on the Missouri, five thousand dollars. The said roads to be constructed under the direction of the Secretary of War, pursuant to contracts to be made by him.

APPROVED, January 7, 1853.

PUBLIC, VII.—An Act authorizing certain Soldiers of the late war with Great Britain to surrender the Bounty Lands drawn by them, and to locate others in lieu thereof.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall and may be lawful for any soldier in the late war with Great Britain, to whom bounty land has been allotted and patented in any State of this Union, by virtue of the laws of the United States passed prior to the year 1850, which was and is unfit for cultivation, to surrender said patent, and to receive in lieu thereof the same quantity of any of the public land subject to private entry at the minimum price as he may select: Provided, That before receiving such new land it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the land so allotted and patented to said soldier is unfit for cultivation, and that said soldier has never disposed of his interest in said land by any sale of his own, and that the same has not been taken or disposed of for his debts due to any individual, and that he shall release all his interest in the same to the United States in such way as said Commissioner shall prescribe; and such surrender and location shall be made within five years from the passage of this act.

APPROVED, January 7, 1853.

PUBLIC, VIII.—An Act for the construction of Military Roads in Oregon Territory.

PUBLIC, XIV.—An Act to prohibit Public Executions in the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That persons now under sentence of death, or who shall hereafter be adjudged to suffer death, within the District of Columbia, shall be executed within the walls of some prison in the said District, or within a yard or enclosure adjoining such prison, and not elsewhere; and it shall be the duty of the Marshal of the District, or one of his deputies, with such officers of the prison, constables, and other peace officers as such marshal or deputy may deem necessary and proper, to attend at such executions.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said marshal, or his deputy, shall invite the District Attorney and the counsel of the prisoner, two or more physicians, and twelve respectable citizens, to be present at every such execution; and, at the request of the person to be executed, shall also allow any ministers of the gospel, not more than three in number, and any of his or her near relatives, to be present thereat; but no person or persons other than those in this act mentioned, and no person whatever, under the age of twenty-one years, shall be allowed to witness any such execution.

APPROVED, January 25, 1853.

PUBLIC, XV.—An Act to extend the provisions of an act approved the third of March, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, and the act approved the twenty-sixth of February, eighteen hundred and forty nine, for carrying into effect the existing Compacts with the States of Alabama and Mississippi, in relation to the five per cent. fund and school reservations.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provisions of "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend an act to carry into effect, in the States of Alabama and Mississippi, the existing compacts with those States with regard to the five per cent. fund and school reservations,'" approved March the third, one thousand eight hundred and forty-seven, and the act to extend the provisions of said act, approved February twenty-sixth, eighteen hundred and forty-nine, be, and the same are hereby, extended, so as to allow the State of Alabama three years from the passage of this act to complete the selections of land authorized by the said acts to which this is an amendment.

APPROVED, January 25, 1853.

PUBLIC, XVI.—An Act concerning Bail in Civil Causes in the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act, no person shall be held to bail in the District of Columbia in any action of debt, assumpsit, or other action founded on or arising out of any contract or agreement, or in any suit or proceeding in equity brought or prosecuted for enforcing the payment of any debt, or of any sum or sums of money due or claimed to be due by reason of any contract or agreement; and any person now held to bail or imprisoned for want of bail in any such action, suit, or proceeding, shall, on application to the Circuit Court of said District in term time, or to any judge thereof in vacation, be discharged on filing a common appearance.

APPROVED, February 3, 1853.

PUBLIC, XVII.—An Act to continue Half Pay to certain Widows and Orphans.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all widows and orphans who were granted and allowed five years' half pay by the provisions of the act approved the twenty-first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight, entitled "An act amending the act granting half pay to widows or orphans where their husbands or fathers have died of wounds received in the military service of the United States, in case of deceased officers and soldiers of the militia and volunteers, passed July fourth, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six," or an act approved the twenty-second day of February, one thousand eight hundred and forty-nine, entitled "An act granting five years' half pay to certain widows and orphans of officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, both regulars and volunteers," be and they are hereby granted a continuance of said half pay, under like limitations and restrictions, for a further period of five years, to commence at the expiration of the half pay provided for by the aforesaid acts: Provided, however, That in case of the death or marriage of such widow before the expiration of said term of five years, the half pay for the remainder of the term shall go to the child or children of the deceased officer or soldier, whilst under the age of sixteen years; and in like manner, the child or children of such deceased, when there is no widow, shall be paid no longer than while there is a child or children under the age aforesaid: And provided further, That no greater sum shall be allowed in any case to the widow or the child or children of any officer than the half pay of a lieutenant colonel: And provided further, That the act approved the twenty-second of February, eighteen hundred and forty-nine, "granting five years' half pay to certain widows and orphans of officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, both regular and volunteer," be so extended and construed as to embrace the widows and minor heirs of the officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the regulars, militia, and volunteers of the war of eighteen hundred and twelve, and of the various Indian wars since seventeen hundred and ninety.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the widows of all officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the revolutionary army, who were married subsequent to January, Anno Domini eighteen hundred, shall be entitled to a pension in the same manner as those who were married before that date.

APPROVED, February 3, 1853.

PUBLIC, XVIII.—An Act for the Relief of Brevet Brigadier-General Bennett Riley, and to enable him to settle his Accounts with the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provisions of the act approved the third of March, eighteen hundred and forty-nine, entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of the accounts of public officers, and others who may have received moneys arising from military contributions or otherwise in Mexico," be, and they are hereby, applied to Brevet Brigadier-General Bennett Riley, in reference to all moneys raised and collected by him, for contributions, penalties, internal assessments, duties, or other objects in California, from the commencement of the late war with Mexico, to the twelfth day of November, eighteen hundred and forty-nine; and the said Riley shall account for, settle, and pay into the Treasury of the United States, for general purposes, any balance of moneys shown to be in his hands, upon such settlement; and all papers, vouchers, and other documents connected with the levying and collecting of any money as aforesaid, shall be filed with the accounts rendered for settlement by the said Riley.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in settling the accounts of said Riley as aforesaid, the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and required to credit him with any sum or sums of money paid or advanced by him for defraying the expenses of the Convention of California, called to frame a State constitution, and also the sum or sums of money advanced by him for the relief of destitute overland emigrants to California, and such credits shall be allowed only on the production of proper vouchers, in such form as may be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States; and the said officers of the Treasury shall in said settlement further credit the said Riley, with all sums of money expended by him for the support of the actual government of California after the ratification of the treaty of peace with Mexico, and before the formation of the State government, and which expenses may appear to have been proper and necessary, but not authorized by any law of the United States: Provided, That before crediting him the said last-mentioned expenditures, they shall be approved by the President of the United States.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That as a compensation for collecting, safe-keeping, and disbursing the said moneys, the said Riley shall be allowed and credited on such settlement, one and a half per cent. upon the moneys so raised and collected by him, and he shall be allowed no other or further compensation therefor.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to cause proper defense to be made, at the expense of the United States, to any suit or suits now pending, or that hereafter may be instituted against the said Riley, for any moneys raised and collected by him in California, and to which this act is applicable.

APPROVED, February 5, 1853.

PUBLIC, XIX.—An Act granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Arkansas and Missouri, to aid in the construction of a Railroad from a point on the Mississippi, opposite the mouth of the Ohio River, via Little Rock, to the Texas Boundary near Fulton, in Arkansas, with branches to Fort Smith and the Mississippi River.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby, granted to the States of Arkansas and Missouri, for the construction of a railroad from a point on the Mississippi river, opposite the mouth of the Ohio, in the State of Missouri, via Little Rock, to the Texas boundary line near Fulton, in Arkansas, with branches from Little Rock, in Arkansas, to the Mississippi river and to Fort Smith, in said State, with the right to take necessary materials of earth, stone, timber, &c., for the construction thereof: Provided, That the right of way shall not exceed one hundred feet on each side of the length thereof, and a copy of the survey of said road, made under the direction of the Legislatures of the said States, shall be forwarded to the proper local land offices, respectively, and to the General Land Office at Washington city, within ninety days after the completion of the same.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, granted to the States of Arkansas and Missouri, respectively, for the purpose of aiding in making the railroad and branches as aforesaid, within their respective limits, every alternate section of land designated by even numbers, for six sections in width on each side of said road and branches; but in case it shall appear that the United States have, when the line or route of said road is definitely fixed by the authority aforesaid, sold any part of any section hereby granted, or that the right of preëmption has attached to the same, then it shall be lawful for any agent or agents, to be appointed by the Governor of said State, to select, subject to the approval aforesaid, from the lands of the United States most contiguous to the tier of sections above specified, so much land in alternate sections or parts of sections as shall be equal to such lands as the United States have sold, or to which the right of preëmption has attached as aforesaid, which lands, being equal in quantity to one half of six sections in width on each side of said road, the States of Arkansas and Missouri shall have and hold to and for the use and purpose aforesaid: Provided, That the lands to be located shall in no case be further than fifteen miles from the line of the road: And provided further, That the lands hereby granted shall be applied in the construction of said road, and shall be disposed of only as the work progresses, and shall be applied to no other purpose whatsoever: And provided further, That any and all lands reserved to the United States by any act of Congress, for the purpose of aiding in any object of internal improvement, or in any manner for any purpose whatsoever, be and the same are hereby reserved to the United States from the operation of this act, except so far as it may be found necessary to locate the routes of the said railroad and branches through such reserved lands.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the sections and parts of sections of land which by such grant shall remain to the United States within six miles on each side of said road, shall not be sold for less than double the minimum price of the public lands when sold.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the said lands hereby granted to the said States shall be subject to the disposal of the Legislatures thereof, for the purposes aforesaid and no other; and the said railway and branches shall be and remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States, free from toll or other charge upon the transportation of any property or troops of the United States.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the lands hereby granted to said States shall be disposed of by said States only in the manner following; that is to say that a quantity of land not exceeding one hundred and twenty sections, and included within a continuous length of twenty miles of said road may be sold; and when the Governors of said State or States shall certify to the Secretary of the Interior that twenty continuous miles of said road is completed, then another like quantity of land hereby granted may be sold; and so from time to time until said road is completed; and if said road is not completed within ten years, no further sales shall be made, and the land unsold shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the United States mails shall at all times be transported on the said road and branches, under the direction of the Post Office Department, at such price as Congress may by law direct.

APPROVED, February 9, 1853.

PUBLIC, XX.—An Act to make the Salary of the Judge of the Criminal Court of the District of Columbia equal to that of an Assistant Judge of the Circuit Court of said District.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the salary of the Judge of the Criminal Court of the District of Columbia be, and the same is hereby, made equal to that of an Assistant Judge of the Circuit Court of said District, as now established by law.

APPROVED, February 11, 1853.

PUBLIC, XXI.—An Act for the relief of the town of Belleview and the cities of Burlington and Dubuque, in the State of Iowa.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be, and hereby is, granted to the town of Belleview, in Iowa, the land bordering on the Mississippi river, in front of said town, reserved by the act of second July, eighteen hundred and thirty-six, for a public highway, and for other public uses; together with the accretions which may have formed thereto, or in front thereof; to be disposed of in such manner as the corporate authorities of said town may direct. The grant made by this act shall operate as a relinquishment only of the right of the United States in and to said premises, and shall in no manner affect the rights of third persons therein, or to the use thereof, but shall be subject to the same; and on application by a duly authorized agent of the corporate authorities of said town to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a patent of relinquishment, in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be issued therefor, as in other cases.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That there shall be, and hereby is, granted to the cities of Burlington and Dubuque, in Iowa, the land bordering on the Mississippi river, in front of said cities, reserved by the act of second July, eighteen hundred and thirty-six, for a public highway, and for other public uses; together with the accretions which may have formed thereto, or in front thereof; to be disposed of in such manner as the corporate authorities of said cities may direct.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the grant made by this act shall operate as a relinquishment only of the right of the United States in and to said premises, and shall in no manner affect the rights of third persons therein, or to the use thereof, but shall be subject to the same; and on application by a duly authorized agent of the corporate authorities of said cities to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a patent of relinquishment, in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be issued therefor, as in other cases.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the lot or parcel of land in the city of Dubuque heretofore set apart and used by the authorities of said city as a cemetery or burying ground, under the act of Congress of the second July, eighteen hundred and thirty-six, entitled "An act for the laying off the towns of Fort Madison and Burlington, in the county of Des Moines, and the towns of Belleview, Dubuque, and Peru, in the county of Dubuque, Territory of Wisconsin, and for other purposes," and the act of the third of March, eighteen hundred and thirty-seven, amendatory thereof, be and the same hereby is granted to the Common Council of the said city of Dubuque to make such disposition of the said land included in said cemetery or burying-ground as that Common Council may deem proper.

APPROVED, February 14, 1853.

PUBLIC, XXII.—An Act granting the Right of Way to the St. Louis and Iron Mountain Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the right of way, sixty feet in width, through the lands in which the St. Louis Arsenal, the St. Louis Marine Hospital, and Jefferson Barracks, are situated, in the State of Missouri, be, and the same is hereby, granted to the St. Louis and Iron Mountain Railroad Company, for the construction of a railroad from the city of St. Louis through said lands: Provided, That the location of said road through the lands aforesaid shall be made subject to the approval of the Secretary of War: Provided further, That said location can be made without injury to the public interest, in the opinion of the said Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the right of way be, and the same is hereby, granted to the Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad Company, and also the right of way to the Cleveland, Painesville, and Ashtabula Railroad Company, across the hospital grounds, so called, belonging to the United States, in the city of Cleveland, in the State of Ohio; the width of each of said roads across said hospital grounds not to exceed sixty feet, where said roads are now respectively located: Provided, That said conveyances can, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be made without detriment to the interests of the United States: And provided further, That the said grant shall be, and is hereby, made subject to such conditions as the said Secretary of the Treasury shall impose on the said companies, respectively, for the protection and security of the grounds from abrasions by the waters of Lake Erie: And provided further, That whenever the said roads shall be discontinued or abandoned, or the conditions of this grant shall be violated, all rights under this act shall cease and determine.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the right of way shall be, and hereby is, granted to the Alleghany Valley Railroad Company for the road of the said company, over and across the grounds of the United States, at and near the Alleghany Arsenal, in the county of Alleghany and State of Pennsylvania: Provided, That the route of the said railroad across the said grounds shall be approved by the Secretary of War before the same is entered upon for the purpose of constructing said railroad: And provided further, That the same can be granted without detriment to the public interest, in the opinion of the Secretary of War.

APPROVED, February 14, 1853.

PUBLIC, XXIII.—An Act to amend an act entitled "An act to create the Office of Surveyor General of the Public Lands in Oregon, and to provide for the survey, and to make donations to the Settlers of the said Public Lands," approved September twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and fifty.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all persons who have located, or may hereafter locate, lands in the Territory of Oregon in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to create the office of surveyor general of the public lands in Oregon, and to provide for the survey, and to make donations to the settlers of the said public lands," approved September twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and fifty, and of which survey shall have been made, or may hereafter be had, in lieu of the term of continued occupation after settlement, as provided by said act, shall be permitted, after occupation for two years of the land so claimed, to pay into the hands of the surveyor general of said Territory at the rate of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre for the lands so claimed, located, and surveyed as aforesaid; and upon the death of any settler before the expiration of the two years' continued possession required by this act, all the rights of the deceased under this act shall descend to the heirs-at-law of such settler, including the widow, where one is left, in equal parts; and proof of compliance with the conditions of this act, up to the time of the death of such settler, shall be sufficient to entitle them to the patent.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That upon the payment of money for lands as aforesaid to the said surveyor general, he shall issue his certificate of such payment, together with an accurate copy of the survey of the land so located and purchased, to the purchaser thereof, and upon the filing of which said certificate and copy of survey in the office of the Commisioner of the General Land Office, a patent shall issue therefor as in other cases.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the said surveyor general to keep and preserve a record of all money so received, and to make out and transmit quarterly, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, an accurate report of the moneys so received by him as aforesaid.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the said surveyor general, immediately upon the taking effect of this act, to enter into security in the sum of fifty thousand dollars, conditioned for the safe-keeping of all moneys received by him as surveyor general, according to law: Provided, however, That in order to compensate the surveyor general of said Territory for the additional labors and responsibility imposed upon him by this act, in receiving, safe-keeping, paying over, and accounting for the moneys aforesaid, he shall receive two per centum on all such sums, which shall include the payment for clerk hire, together with all costs and expenses incidental to such special services in any one year: Provided, The salary and percentage of said surveyor general and for clerk hire shall not exceed four thousand dollars for any one year.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the act to which this is an amendment be, and the same are hereby, extended and continued in force until the first day of December, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That every person entitled to the benefit of the fourth section of the act of which this is amendatory, who was resident in said Territory on or prior to the first of December, eighteen hundred and fifty, shall be, and hereby is, required to file with the surveyor general of said Territory, in advance of the time when the public surveys shall be extended over the particular land claimed by him, where those surveys shall not have been made previous to the date of this act, a notice in writing, setting forth his claim to the benefits of said section, and citing all required particulars in reference to such settlement claim; and all persons failing to give such notice on or prior to the first of December, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, shall be thereafter debarred from ever receiving any benefit under said fourth section. And all persons who, on the first of December, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, shall have settled on surveyed lands in said Territory, in virtue of the provisions of the fifth section of the act of which this is amendatory, who shall fail to give notice in writing of such settlement, specifying the particulars thereof to the surveyor general of said Territory, on or prior to the first of April, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, shall thereafter be debarred from ever receiving the benefits of said fifth section.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That from and after the first of April, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, all public lands within the limits of the townships surveyed or to be surveyed in said Territory, west of the Cascade mountains, which shall not have been claimed under the provisions of the fourth and fifth sections of the act of which this is amendatory, or reserved for public uses by law, or order of the President, and excepting also mineral lands, shall be subject to public sale and private entry as other public lands of the United States; and so soon as he shall deem expedient, the President of the United States shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a receiver of public moneys for the Territory of Oregon, west of the Cascade mountains, who shall give bond and security, in the penalty of fifty thousand dollars, for the faithful discharge of his official trust, and whose duties, under the laws in relation to the public lands of the United States in said Territory, shall be the same as those of other like officers of the United States, and who shall be allowed not exceeding five hundred dollars per annum for the safe-keeping and accounting for the public moneys by him received, including all charges for office rent and clerk hire; and at such time as the President of the United States shall deem it expedient, he shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register of the land office for the Territory of Oregon, west of the Cascade mountains, who shall enter into bond, with sufficient security, for the faithful discharge of his official duties, as other like officers, and whose duties and authority, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be the same as those imposed by law on other like officers, consistently with the provisions of this act and of the act of which this is amendatory, and whose compensation shall be equal to that allowed to the receiver of public moneys to be appointed under this act; and until such register shall have been appointed, and entered upon the discharge of his official duties, the surveyor general of Oregon shall perform all the duties which shall appertain to such office.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That each widow now residing in Oregon Territory, and such others as shall locate in said Territory, whose husband, had he lived, would have been entitled to a claim under the provisions of the act to which this is an amendment, shall be entitled, under the provisions and requirements of said act, to the same quantity of land that she would have been but for the death of her husband; and that in case of the death of the widow prior to the expiration of the four years' continued possession required by said act, to which this is an amendment, all the rights of the deceased shall inure unto and be vested in the heirs-at-law of such widow.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That all reservations heretofore, as well as hereafter, made in pursuance of the fourteenth section of the act to which this is an amendment, shall, for magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful public uses, except for forts, be limited to an amount not exceeding twenty acres for each and every of said objects at any one point or place, and for forts to an amount not exceeding six hundred and forty acres at any one point or place: Provided, That if it shall be deemed necessary, in the judgment of the President, to include in any such reservation the improvement of any settler made previous to such reservation, it shall, in such case, be the duty of the Secretary of War to cause the value of such improvements to be ascertained; and the amount so ascertained shall be paid to the party entitled thereto, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the said surveyor general, in the discharge of his duties under this act, shall be subject to all the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the better organization of the Treasury, and for the collection, safe-keeping, transfer, and disbursement of the public revenue," approved August sixth, eighteen hundred and forty-six; and all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

APPROVED, February 14, 1853.

PUBLIC, XXIV.—An Act to prevent in certain cases a Failure or Delay of Justice in the Courts of the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That where, at any term of the Circuit or Criminal Court of the District of Columbia, a jury shall be empanneled to try any cause or any issue or issues joined in any cause, and it shall happen that no verdict shall be found, nor the jury otherwise discharged before the day appointed by law for the commencement of the next succeeding term, the Court shall and may, nevertheless, proceed with the trial by the same jury in every respect as if such term had not commenced; and all subsequent proceedings to final judgment, if such judgment shall be rendered, shall be entered and have legal effect and operation as of the term at which the jury shall have been empanneled, any law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.

APPROVED, February 16, 1853.

PUBLIC, XXV.—An Act amendatory of existing laws relative to the Half Dollar, Quarter Dollar, Dime, and Half Dime.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the first day of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, the weight of the half dollar or piece of fifty cents shall be one hundred and ninety-two grains, and the quarter dollar, dime, and half dime, shall be, respectively, one half, one fifth, and one tenth, of the weight of said half dollar.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the silver coins issued in conformity with the above section, shall be legal tenders in payment of debts for all sums not exceeding five dollars.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That in order to procure bullion for the requisite coinage of the subdivisions of the dollar authorized by this act, the treasurer of the mint shall, with the approval of the director, purchase such bullion with the bullion fund of the mint. He shall charge himself with the gain arising from the coinage of such bullion into coins of a nominal value exceeding the intrinsic value thereof, and shall be credited with the difference between such intrinsic value and the price paid for said bullion, and with the expense of distributing said coins as hereinafter provided. The balances to his credit, or the profit of said coinage, shall be, from time to time, on a warrant of the director of the mint, transferred to the account of the treasurer of the United States.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That such coins shall be paid out at the mint in exchange for gold coins at par, in sums not less than one hundred dollars; and it shall be lawful, also, to transmit parcels of the same from time to time to the assistant treasurers, depositaries, and other officers of the United States, under general regulations, proposed by the director of the mint, and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, however, That the amount coined into quarter-dollars, dimes, and half-dimes, shall be regulated by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That no deposits for coinage into the half-dollar, quarter-dollar, dime, and half-dime, shall hereafter be received, other than those made by the treasurer of the mint, as herein authorized, and upon account of the United States.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That, at the option of the depositor, gold or silver may be cast into bars or ingots of either pure metal or of standard fineness, as the owner may prefer, with a stamp upon the same designating its weight and fineness; but no piece, of either gold or silver, shall be cast into bars or ingots of a less weight than ten ounces, except pieces of one ounce, of two ounces, of three ounces, and of five ounces, all of which pieces of less weight than ten ounces shall be of the standard fineness, with their weight and fineness stamped upon them; but in cases whether the gold and silver deposited be coined or cast into bars or ingots, there shall be a charge to the depositor, in addition to the charge now made for refining or parting the metals, of one-half of one per centum; the money arising from this charge of one-half per centum shall be charged to the treasurer of the mint, and from time to time, on warrant of the director of the mint, shall be transferred into the Treasury of the United States: Provided, however, That nothing contained in this section shall be considered as applying to the half-dollar, the quarter-dollar, the dime, and half-dime.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That from time to time there shall be struck and coined at the mint of the United States and the branches thereof, conformably in all respects to law, and conformably in all respects to the standard of gold coins now established by law, a coin of gold of the value of three dollars or units, and all the provisions of an act entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of gold dollars and double eagles," approved March third, eighteen hundred and forty-nine, shall be applied to the coin herein authorized, so far as the same may be applicable; but the devices and shape of the three-dollar piece shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That this act shall be in force from and after the first day of June next.

APPROVED, February 21, 1853.

PUBLIC, XXVI.—An Act to regulate the Fees and Costs to be allowed Clerks, Marshals, and Attorneys of the Circuit and District Courts of the United States, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in lieu of the compensation now allowed by law to attorneys, solicitors, and proctors in the United States courts, to United States district attorneys, clerks of the district and circuit courts, marshals, witnesses, jurors, commissioners, and printers, in the several States, the following and no other compensation shall be taxed and allowed. But this act shall not be construed to prohibit attorneys, solicitors, and proctors from charging to and receiving from their clients, other than the Government, such reasonable compensation for their services, in addition to the taxable costs, as may be in accordance with general usage in their respective States, or may be agreed upon between the parties.

Fees of Attorneys, Solicitors, and Proctors.

In a trial before a jury, in civil and criminal cases, or before referees, or on a final hearing in equity or admiralty, a docket fee of twenty dollars: Provided, That in cases in admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, where the libelant shall recover less than fifty dollars, the docket fee of his proctor shall be but ten dollars.

In cases at law, where judgment is rendered without a jury, ten dollars; and five dollars where a cause is discontinued.

For scire facias and other proceedings on recognisances, five dollars.

For each deposition taken and admitted as evidence in the cause, two dollars and fifty cents.

A compensation of five dollars shall be allowed for the services rendered in cases removed from a district to a circuit court by writ of error or appeal.

For examination by a district attorney, before a judge or commissioner, of a person or persons charged with crime, five dollars per day for the time necessarily employed.

For each day of his necessary attendance in a court of the United States, on the business of the United States, when the same shall be held at the place of his abode, five dollars, and the like sum for his attendance for each day of the term when the said court shall be held elsewhere.

For traveling from the place of his abode to the place of holding any court of the United States in his district, and to the place of any examination before a judge or commissioner, of a person or erso ns charged with crime, ten cents per mile for oing and ten cents for returning.

When an indictment for crime shall be tried before a jury, and a conviction is had, in addition to the attorney's fees allowed by this act, the district attorney may be allowed a counsel fee in proportion to the importance and difficulty of the cause, not exceeding thirty dollars.

In every case where a district attorney has, during the last six years, prosecuted or defended a suit in which the United States was concerned, in a district where the law allows no taxable attorney's fees, and for which he has received no compensation, except his per diem and annual salary, he shall be paid for his services according to the provisions of this act.

For the services of counsel, rendered at the request of the head of a Department, such sum as may be stipulated or agreed on.

Whenever there are or shall be several charges against any person or persons for the same act or transaction, or for two or more acts or transactions connected together, or for two or more acts or transactions of the same class of crimes or offenses which may be properly joined, instead of having several indictments, the whole may be joined in one indictment in separate counts; and if two or more indictments shall be found in such cases, the court may order them consolidated.

Whenever two or more things belonging to the same person or persons are or shall be seized for an alleged violation of the revenue laws, the whole shall be included in one suit; and if not so included, and separate actions are prosecuted, the court may consolidate them.

Whenever two or more indictments, suits, or proceedings, are or shall be prosecuted, which should be joined, the district attorney prosecuting them shall be paid but one bill of costs for all of them; and if any attorney, proctor, or other person admitted to manage or conduct causes in any court of the United States, or of the Territories thereof, shall appear to have multiplied the proceedings in any cause before such court, so as to increase costs unreasonably and vexatiously, such person may be required, by order of the court, to satisfy any excess of costs so increased.

Whenever two or more charges are or shall be made, or two or more indictments shall be found against a person, only one writ or warrant shall be necessary to arrest and commit him for trial; and it shall be sufficient to state in the writ the name or general character of the offenses, or to refer to them only in very general terms. Only one writ or warrant shall be necessary to remove a prisoner from one district to another; a copy of which may be delivered to the sheriff or jailor from whose custody the prisoner may be taken, and another copy thereof to the sheriff or jailor to whose custody he may be committed, and the original writ, with the marshal's return thereon, shall be returned to the clerk of the district to which he may be removed. Whenever a prisoner is committed to a sheriff or jailor by virtue of a writ, warrant, or mittimus, a copy thereof shall be delivered to the sheriff or jailor as his authority to hold the prisoner, and the original writ, warrant, or mittimus, shall be returned to the proper court or officer with the officer's return thereon.

Clerks' Fees.

For issuing and entering every process, commission, summons, capias, execution, warrant, attachment, or other writ, except a writ of venire, summons, or subpœna for a witness, one dollar.

For filing and entering every declaration, plea, or other paper, ten cents.

For administering every oath or affirmation to a witness, or other person, except a juror, ten cents.

For entering any return, rule, order, continuance, judgment, decree or recognizance, drawing any bond, or making any record, certificate, return, or report, for each folio fifteen cents; and for a copy of any such entry or record, or of any paper on file, not exceeding one folio, ten cents; and for each additional folio, ten cents.

For making dockets and indexes, and for all other services on the trial or argument of a cause, where issue is joined and testimony given, including venire and taxing costs, three dollars.

For making dockets and indexes, and for all other services in a cause where issue is joined and no testimony given, including taxing costs, two dollars.

For making dockets and indexes, and for taxing costs and other services, in a cause which is dismissed, discontinued, or a judgment or decree is made or rendered therein without issue, one dollar.

In equity and admiralty causes only the process, pleadings, and decree, and such orders and memorandums as may be necessary to show the jurisdiction of the court and regularity of the proceedings, shall be entered upon the final record; and, in case of an appeal, copies of the proofs, and of such entries and papers on file as may be necessary on hearing of the appeal, may be certified up to the appellate court.

For affixing a seal of the court to any instrument when required, twenty cents. For issuing a writ of subpœna, twenty-five cents. For every search for any particular mortgage, judgment, or other lien, fifteen cents. For traveling from the office of the clerk, where he is required by law to reside, to the place of holding any court required to be held by law, five cents per mile for going and five for returning, and five dollars per day for his attendance on any such court or courts while actually in session.

For searching the records of the court for judgments, decrees, and other instruments constituting a general lien upon real estate, and certifying the result of such search, fifteen cents for each person against whom such search is required to be made.

For receiving, keeping, and paying out money, in pursuance of the requirements of any statute or order of court, one per cent. on the amount so received, kept, and paid.

In cases removed by writ of error or appeal, the clerk's fees for making dockets and taxing costs, shall be but one dollar, and the clerks of the district and circuit courts respectively, ex officio, shall be, and hereby are, authorized and empowered to administer oaths, take acknowledgments, take and certify affidavits and depositions in the same manner as commissioners, and shall be entitled to the same fees and compensation therefor.

Marshals' Fees.

For service of any warrant, attachment, summons, capias, or other writ, (except execution, venire, or a summons or subpœna for a witness,) two dollars for each person on whom such service may be made: Provided, That on petition setting forth the facts on oath, the court may allow such fair compensation for the keeping of personal property attached and held on mesne process, as shall, on examination, be found to be reasonable.

For serving a writ of subpœna on a witness, fifty cents; and no further compensation shall be allowed for any copy, summons, or notice for witness.

For travel in going only to serve any process, warrant, attachment, or other writ, including writs of subpœna in civil and criminal cases, six cents per mile, to be computed from the place of service to the court or place where the writ or process is returned; and if more than one person is served therewith, the travel shall be computed from the court to the place of service which shall be the most remote, adding thereto extra travel which shall be necessary to serve it on others: Provided, That when more than two writs of any kind in behalf of the same party or parties, to be served on the same person or persons, or part of the same persons, are or might be served at the same time, the marshal shall be entitled to compensation for travel on only two of such writs; and to save unnecessary expense it shall be the duty of the clerk to insert the names of as many witnesses in a cause in each subpœna as convenience in serving the same will permit. And in all cases where mileage is allowed to the marshal by this act, it shall be at his option to receive the same or his actual traveling expenses, to be proved on his oath to the satisfaction of the court.

For each bail bond, fifty cents.

For summoning appraisers, each fifty cents.

For every commitment or discharge of a prisoner, fifty cents.

For every proclamation in admiralty, thirty cents.

For sales of vessels or other property under process in admiralty, or under the order of a court of admiralty, and for receiving and paying the money, for any sum under five hundred dollars, two and one half per centum; for any larger sum one and one quarter per centum upon the excess.

For serving an attachment in rem or a libel in admiralty, two dollars, and the necessary expenses of keeping boats, vessels, or other property attached or libeled in admiralty, not exceeding two dollars and fifty cents per day; and in case the debt or claim shall be settled by the parties without a sale of the property, the marshal shall be entitled to a commission of one per centum on the first five hundred dollars of the claim or decree and one half of one per centum on the excess over five hundred dollars: Provided, That in case the value of the property shall be less than the claim, then and in such case such commission shall be allowed only on the appraised value thereof.

For serving a writ of possession, partition, execution, or any final process, the same mileage as is herein allowed for the service of any other writ; and for making the service, seizing, or levying on property, advertising, and disposing of the same by sale, set-off, or otherwise, according to law, receiving and paying over the money, the same fees and poundage as are or shall be allowed for similar services to the sheriffs of the several States respectively in which the service may be rendered.

For serving venires and summoning every twelve men as grand or petit jurors, four dollars, or thirty-three and one third cents each; and in those States where jurors, by the laws of the State, are drawn by constables, or other officers of corporate towns or places, by lot, the marshal shall receive for the use of the officers employed in drawing and summoning the jurors and returning each venire, two dollars; and for his own trouble in distributing the venires, two dollars for each jury: Provided, That in no case shall the fees for distributing and serving venires, and drawing and summoning jurors by township officers, including mileage chargeable by the marshal for such service, at any court, exceed fifty dollars.

For traveling from his residence to the place of holding court, to attend a term thereof, ten cents per mile for going only, and five dollars per day for attending the circuit and district courts when they are both in session, or for attending either of said courts when but one is in session, and for bringing in and committing prisoners and witnesses during the term.

For executing a deed prepared by a party or his attorney, one dollar.

For transporting criminals, ten cents per mile for himself, each necessary guard, and each prisoner.

For copies of writs or papers furnished at the request of any party, ten cents per folio.

For holding a court of inquiry or other proceeding before a jury, including the summoning of a jury, five dollars. The marshal of the District of South Carolina shall hereafter be entitled to receive a salary of two hundred dollars per annum.

The respective courts of the United States shall appoint criers for their courts, to be allowed the sum of two dollars per day; and the marshals are hereby authorized to appoint such a number of persons, not exceeding five, as the judges of their respective courts shall determine, to attend upon the grand and other juries, and for other necessary purposes, who shall be allowed for their services the sum of two dollars per day, to be paid by and included in the accounts of the marshal, out of any money of the United States in his hands, the compensation to be given only for actual attendance; and when both courts are in session at the same time, to be paid but for attendance on one court.

For expenses while employed in endeavoring to arrest under process any person charged with or convicted of a crime, the sum actually expended, not to exceed two dollars per day, in addition to his compensation for service and travel.

For disbursing money to jurors and witnesses, and for other expenses, two per centum.

For attending examinations before a commissioner, and bringing in, guarding, and returning prisoners charged with crime, and witnesses, two dollars per day, and the same for each deputy necessarily attending, not exceeding two.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That there shall be paid to the marshal his fees for services rendered for the United States, for summoning jurors and witnesses in behalf of the United States, and in behalf of any prisoner to be tried for a capital offense; for the maintenance of prisoners of the United States confined in jail for any criminal offense; for the commitment or discharge of such prisoners; for the expenses necessarily incurred for fuel, lights, and other contingencies that may accrue in holding the courts within the district, and providing the books necessary to record the proceedings thereof: Provided, That the marshal shall not incur an expense of more than twenty dollars in any one year for furniture, or fifty dollars for rent of building and making improvements thereon, without first submitting a statement and estimates to the Secretary of the Interior, and getting his instructions in the premises.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That every district attorney, clerk of a district court, clerk of a circuit court, and marshal of the United States, shall, until otherwise directed by law, upon the first days of January and July in each year, commencing with the first day of July next, or within thirty days from and after the days specified, make to the Secretary of the Interior, in such form as he shall prescribe, a return in writing, embracing all the fees and emoluments of their respective offices, of every name and character, distinguishing the fees and emoluments received or payable under the bankrupt act, from those received or payable for any other service; and in case of a marshal, further distinguishing the fees and emoluments received or payable for services by himself personally rendered, from those received or payable for services rendered by a deputy; and also distinguishing the fees and emoluments so received or payable for services rendered by each deputy, by name, and the proportion of such fees and emoluments which, by the terms of his service, each deputy is to receive; and also embracing all the necessary office expenses of such officer, together with the vouchers for the payment of the same for the half year ending on the said first day of January or July, as the case may be, which return shall be, in all cases, verified by the oath of the officer making the same. And no district attorney shall be allowed by the said Secretary of the Interior to retain of the fees and emoluments of his said office, for his own personal compensation, over and above his necessary office expenses, the necessary clerk hire included, to be audited and allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, a sum exceeding six thousand dollars per year, and at and after that rate for such time as he shall hold the office; and no clerk of a district court, or clerk of a circuit court, shall be allowed by the said Secretary to retain of the fees and emoluments of his said office, or, in case both of the said clerkships shall be held by the same person, of the said offices, for his own personal compensation, over and above the necessary expenses of his office, and necessary clerk hire included, also to be audited and allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, a sum exceeding three thousand five hundred dollars per year for any such district clerk, or circuit clerk, or at and after that rate for such time as he shall hold the office: Provided, That when the compensation of any clerk shall be less than five hundred dollars per annum, the difference, ascertained and allowed by the proper accounting officer of the Treasury, shall be paid to him therefrom, and no marshal shall be allowed by the said Secretary, to retain of the fees and emoluments of his office, for his own personal compensation, over and above a proper allowance to his deputies, which shall in no case exceed three fourths of the fees and emoluments received as payable for the services rendered by the deputy to whom the allowance is made, and may be reduced below that rate by the said Secretary of the Interior whenever the return shall show that rate of allowance to be unreasonable, and over and above the necessary office expenses of the said marshals, the necessary clerk hire included, also to be audited and allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, a sum exceeding six thousand dollars per year, or at and after that rate for such time as he shall hold the office; and every such officer shall, with each such return made by him, pay into the Treasury of the United States, or deposit to the credit of the Treasurer thereof, as he may be directed by the Secretary of the Interior, any surplus of the fees and emoluments of his office, which his half yearly return so made as aforesaid shall show to exist over and above the compensation and allowances hereinbefore authorized to be retained and paid by him. And in every case where the return of any such officer shall show that a surplus may exist, the said Secretary of the Interior shall cause such returns to be carefully examined, and the accounts of disbursements to be regularly audited by the proper officers of his department, and an account to be opened with such officer in proper books to be provided for that purpose, and the allowances for personal compensation for each calendar year shall be made from the fees and emoluments of that year, and not otherwise: And provided further, That nothing in any existing law of Congress authorizing the payment of a per diem compensation to a district attorney, clerk of a district court, or clerk of a circuit court, or marshal, or deputy marshal, for attendance upon the district or circuit courts during their sittings, shall be so construed as to authorize any such payment to any one of those officers for attendance upon either of those courts while sitting for the transaction of business under the bankrupt law merely, or for any portion of the time for which either of the said courts may be held open or in session by the authority conferred in that law; and no such charge in an account of any officer shall be certified as payable, or shall be allowed and paid out of the money hereinbefore appropriated for defraying the expenses of the courts of the United States; and no per diem or other allowance shall be made to any such officer for attendance at rule days of the circuit or district courts; and when the circuit and district courts sit at the same time, no greater per diem or other allowance shall be made to any such officer than for an attendance on one court.

The two last provisos of paragraph one hundred and sixty-seven of the civil and diplomatic appropriation act, approved May the eighteenth, one thousand eight hundred and forty-two, which require clerks to certify accounts, and confine the marshals, clerks, and district attorneys of the northern and southern districts of New York to the fees allowed by the State law to the clerks, attorneys, counsellors, and sheriffs, for similar services in the State courts, are hereby repealed.

Commissioners' Fees.

For administering an oath, ten cents; taking an acknowledgment, twenty-five cents.

For hearing and deciding on criminal charges, five dollars per day for the time necessarily employed.

For attending to a reference in a litigated matter in a civil cause at law, in equity, or in admiralty, in pursuance of an order of court, three dollars per day.

For taking and certifying depositions to file, twenty cents for each folio of one hundred words, and ten cents per folio for each copy of the same furnished to a party on request.

For issuing any warrant or writ, or any other service, the same compensation as is allowed to clerks for like services.

For issuing any warrant under the tenth article of the treaty of the ninth of August, eighteen hundred and forty-two, between the United States and the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, against any person charged with any of the crimes or offenses set forth in said article, two dollars; and the same sum for any warrant issued under the provisions of the convention for the surrender of criminals between the United States and the King of the French, concluded at Washington on the ninth of November, eighteen hundred and forty-three; and for hearing and deciding upon the case of any person charged with any offense or crime, and arrested under the provisions of said treaty or convention, five dollars per day for the time necessarily employed.

Witnesses' Fees.

For each day's attendance in court, or before any officer pursuant to law, one dollar and fifty cents; and five cents per mile for traveling from his place of residence to said place of trial or hearing, and five cents per mile for returning. When a witness is subpœnaed in more than one cause between the same parties in different suits at the same court, but one travel fee and one per diem compensation shall be allowed for attendance, to be taxed in the first case disposed of, and "per diem" only in the other causes, to be taxed from that time in each case in the order in which they may be disposed of.

When a witness is detained in prison for want of security for his appearance, he shall be entitled to a compensation of one dollar per day over and above his subsistence.

When a clerk or other officer of the United States shall be sent away from his place of business as a witness for the Government, either with or without papers or books, his salary shall continue; his necessary expenses, stated in items and sworn to, in going, returning, and attendance on the court, shall be audited and paid, but no mileage or other compensation shall in any case be allowed.

There shall be paid to such seaman or other person as has been or shall be sent to the United States from any foreign port, station, sea or ocean, by any United States minister, chargé d'affaires, consul, commander, or captain, to give testimony in any criminal case which has been or may be depending in any court of the United States, such compensation as the court which had or shall have cognizance of the crime shall adjudge to be right and proper, not to exceed one dollar for each day the said seaman or person has been or shall be necessarily on the voyage, and arriving at the place of examination or trial, exclusive of sustenance or transportation; the court to take into consideration, in fixing said compensation, the condition of said seaman or witness, whether his voyage has been broken up to his injury by his being sent to the United States or not.

If said seaman or person has been or shall be transported in an armed vessel of the United States, no charge for sustenance or transportation shall be made; if in any other vessel, the court may adjudge what compensation shall be paid to the captain of said vessel, and the same shall be paid accordingly: Provided, That in no case shall transportation and subsistence be allowed at a rate exceeding fifty cents per diem.

Jurors' Fees.

For actual attendance at any court or courts, two dollars per day during such attendance.

For traveling from their residence to said court or courts, five cents per mile for going, and the same for returning.

Printers' Fees.

For publishing any statute, notice, or order required by law, or the lawful order of any court, department, bureau, or other person, in any newspaper, forty cents per folio for the first insertion, and twenty cents per folio for each subsequent insertion. That the compensation herein provided shall include the furnishing lawful evidence, under oath, of publication, to be made and furnished by the printer or publisher making such publication.

The term folio in this act shall mean one hundred words, counting each figure as a word. When there are over fifty and under one hundred words, they shall be counted as one folio, but not when there are less, except when the whole statute, notice, or order contains less than fifty words.

The bill of fees of clerk, marshal, and attorneys, and the amount paid printers, and witnesses, and lawful fees for exemplifications and copies of papers necessarily obtained for use on trial in cases where, by law, costs are recoverable in favor of the prevailing party, shall be taxed by a judge or clerk of the court, and be included in and form a portion of a judgment or decree against the losing party, such taxed bill shall be filed with the papers in the cause.

In cases where the United States are parties, the marshal shall, on the order of the court, to be entered in its minutes, pay to the jurors and witnesses all such fees as they may appear by such order to be entitled to, which sums shall be allowed him at the Treasury in his accounts.

The fees of the marshals, clerks, commissioners, and district attorneys, in cases where the United States are liable to pay the same, shall be paid on settling their accounts at the Treasury, such accounts to be made out and verified by the party under oath, and forwarded to the First Auditor of the Treasury.

In prize cases, where there is a condemnation and sale, the costs, so far as they are payable and can be paid out of the proceeds of sale, shall be paid on the order of the court upon the filing of the taxed bills, making them a portion of the record in the case.

No district attorney, marshal, or clerk, or their deputies, shall receive any other or greater compensation for any services rendered by him than is provided in this act; and all acts and parts of acts allowing to either of them any other or greater fees than is herein provided are hereby repealed, and to receive any other or greater compensation is hereby declared to be a misdemeanor; and if any officer hereinbefore mentioned, or his deputy, shall, by reason or color of his office, wilfully and corruptly demand and receive any other or greater fees than those allowed in this act, he shall, on conviction thereof in any court of the United States, forfeit and pay a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, and be imprisoned not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court before whom the conviction shall be had.

But this shall not be construed to probibit the payment of any salary authorized by statute: Provided, That in the State of California and the Territory of Oregon, officers, jurors, and witnesses shall be allowed for the term of two years double the fees and compensation allowed by this act, and the same fees allowed by this act, with fifty per cent. added thereto, for two years thereafter.

That before any bill of costs shall be taxed by any judge or other officer, or allowed by any officer of the Treasury, in favor of clerks, marshals, commissioners, or district attorneys, the party claiming such bill shall prove by his own oath, or some other person having a knowledge of the facts, to be attached to such bill and filed therewith, that the services charged therein have been actually and necessarily performed as therein stated.

That witnesses who are required to attend any term of the court on the part of the United States shall be subpœnaed to attend to testify generally on their behalf, and not to depart the court without leave of the court or district attorney, under which it shall be their duty to appear before the grand jury or petit jury, or both, as they shall be required by the court or district attorney; no writ shall be necessary to bring into court any prisoner or person in custody, or for remanding him from the court into custody; but the same shall be done on the order of the court or district attorney, for which no fee shall be charged by the clerk or the marshal.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall falsely take an oath or affirmation in relation to any matter authorized by this act, such person shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and upon conviction thereof shall suffer the pains and penalties in that case provided.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That all laws and regulations heretofore made which are incompatible with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed and abrogated: Provided, nevertheless, That this act shall not be construed to repeal or modify any clause or provision of an act approved the eighteenth September, eighteen hundred and fifty, entitled "An act to amend, and supplementary to, the act entitled 'An act respecting fugitives from justice, and persons escaping from the service of their masters,'" approved February twelfth, seventeen hundred and ninety-three.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the act approved September twenty-eighth, eighteen hundred and fifty, entitled "An act to provide for extending the laws and judicial system of the United States to the State of California," be so amended as to confer on the district court of the State of California jurisdiction in all criminal cases as fully and completely as is conferred by law upon the district or circuit court of the State of New York.

APPROVED, February 26, 1853.

PUBLIC, XXVII.—An Act to prevent Frauds upon the Treasury of the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all transfers and assignments hereafter made of any claim upon the United States, or any part or share thereof, or interest therein, whether absolute or conditional, and whatever may be the consideration therefor; and all powers of attorney, orders, or other authorities for receiving payment of any such claim, or any part or share thereof, shall be absolutely null and void, unless the same shall be freely made and executed in the presence of at least two attesting witnesses, after the allowance of such claim, the ascertainment of the amount due, and the issuing of a warrant for the payment thereof.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That any officer of the United States, or person holding any place of trust or profit, or discharging any official function under, or in connection with, any executive department of the Government of the United States, or under the Senate or House of Representatives of the United States, who, after the passage of this act, shall act as an agent or attorney for prosecuting any claim against the United States, or shall in any manner, or by any means otherwise than in the discharge of his proper official duties, aid or assist in the prosecution or support of any such claim or claims, or shall receive any gratuity, or any share of or interest in any claim from any claimant against the United States, with intent to aid or assist, or in consideration of having aided or assisted, in the prosecution of such claims, shall be liable to indictment as for a misdemeanor, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, and, on conviction, shall pay a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or suffer imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding one year, or both, as the court in its discretion shall adjudge.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That any Senator or Representative in Congress who, after the passage of this act, shall, for compensation paid or to be paid, certain or contingent, act as agent or attorney for prosecuting any claim or claims against the United States, or shall in any manner or by any means for such compensation aid or assist in the prosecution or support of any such claim or claims, or shall receive any gratuity, or any share of or interest in any claim from any claimant against the United States, with intent to aid or assist, or in consideration of having aided or assisted in the prosecution of such claim, shall be liable to indictment as for a misdemeanor in any court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, and, on conviction, shall pay a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or suffer imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding one year, or both, as the court in its discretion shall adjudge.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That any person who, with intent to steal or destroy, shall wilfully and knowingly destroy, ar attempt to destroy, or shall take and carry away any record, paper, or proceeding of a court of justice, filed or deposited with any clerk or officer of such court, or any paper or document or record filed or deposited in any public office, or with any judicial or public officer, shall, without reference to the value of the record, paper, document, or proceeding, so taken, be deemed guilty of felony, and on conviction in any court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, shall pay a fine not exceeding two thousand dollars, or suffer imprisonment in a penitentiary not exceeding three years, or both, as the court in its discretion shall adjudge.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That any officer having the custody of any record, document, paper, or proceeding specified in the last preceding section of this act, who shall fraudulently take away, or withdraw, or destroy any such record, document, paper, or proceeding filed in his office or deposited with him, or in his custody, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and on conviction in any court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, shall pay a fine not exceeding two thousand dollars, or suffer imprisonment in a penitentiary not exceeding three years, or both, as the court in its discretion shall adjudge, and shall forfeit his office and be forever afterwards disqualified from holding any office under the Government of the United States.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons shall directly or indirectly, promise, offer, or give, or cause or procure to be promised, offered, or given, any money, goods, right in action, bribe, present, or reward, or any promise, contract, undertaking, obligation, or security, for the payment or delivery of any money, goods, right in action, bribe, present, or reward, or any other valuable thing whatever, to any member of the Senate or House of Representatives of the United States, after his election as such member, and either before or after he shall have qualified and taken his seat, or to any officer of the United States, or person holding any place of trust or profit, or discharging any official function under or in connection with any department of the Government of the United States, or under the Senate or House of Representatives of the United States, after the passage of this act, with intent to influence his vote or decision on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding which may then be pending, or may by law, or under the Constitution of the United States, be brought before him in his official capacity, or in his place of trust or profit, and shall be thereof convicted, such person or persons so offering, promising, or giving, or causing or procuring to be promised, offered, or given any such money, goods, right in action, bribe, present or reward, or any promise, contract, undertaking, obligation, or security for the payment or delivery of any money, goods, right in action, bribe, present, or reward, or other valuable thing whatever, and the member, officer, or person who shall in any wise accept or receive the same, or any part thereof, shall be liable to indictment as for a high crime and misdemeanor in any court of the United States having jurisdiction for the trial of crimes and misdemeanors; and shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not exceeding three times the amount so offered, promised, or given, and imprisoned in a penitentiary not exceeding three years; and the person convicted of so accepting or receiving the same, or any part thereof, if an officer or person holding any such place of trust or profit as aforesaid, shall forfeit his office or place; and any person so convicted under this section shall forever be disqualified to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit, under the United States.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of this act, and of the act of July twenty-ninth, eighteen hundred and forty-six, entitled "An act in relation to the payment of claims," shall apply and extend to all claims against the United States, whether allowed by special acts of Congress or arising under general laws of treaties, or in any other manner whatever.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That nothing in the second and third sections of this act contained shall be construed to apply to the prosecution or defense of any action or suit in any judicial court of the United States.

APPROVED, February 26, 1853.

PUBLIC, XXVIII.—An Act to Regulate the Terms of the District Court of the United States for the district of Iowa.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That instead of three terms annually of the district court of the United States for the district of Iowa, as now prescribed by law, there shall hereafter be held annually six terms of said court, as follows: at Dubuque on the first Mondays of January and July; at Iowa city on the first Mondays of May and October; and at Burlington on the third Mondays of May and October.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That all process, bail-bonds, and recognizances returnable at the term of said court at Dubuque, Iowa city, and Burlington respectively, shall be returnable and returned to the court next to be held at the place where said process, bail-bonds, and recognizances are made returnable, and all continuances may be made to conform to this act.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

APPROVED, February 26, 1853.

PUBLIC, XXVIX.—An Act making Appropriations for the Support of the Military Academy for the year ending the thirtieth of June, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending the thirtieth of June, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four.

For pay of officers, instructors, cadets, and musicians, eighty-eight thousand two hundred and sixty-six dollars.

For commutation of subsistence, two thousand one hundred and ninety dollars.

For forage for officers' horses, nine hundred and sixty dollars.

For the construction of a wharf, four thousand three hundred and thirty dollars.

APPROVED, March 2, 1853.

PUBLIC, XXX.—An Act to provide Compensation to such Persons as may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury to receive and keep the Public Money, under the fifteenth section of the act of sixth August, eighteen hundred and forty-six, for the additional services required under that act.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the depositaries which have been or may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, under the fifteenth section of the act of the sixth of August, eighteen hundred and forty-six, to receive payments and give receipts or certificates of deposit for public money from miscellaneous sources, other than the transactions of the respective offices for which they are or may be commissioned, may be paid in full compensation for receiving, safely keeping, and paying out such public money, after the first day of March, eighteen hundred and forty-nine, at the rate of one half of one per centum for the first one hundred thousand dollars; one fourth of one per centum for the second one hundred thousand dollars; and one eighth of one per centum for all sums over two hundred thousand dollars; any sum which may have been allowed to such depositary for rent or any other contingent expenses in respect to the custody of such public money, being deducted from such compensation before any payment shall be made therefor: Provided, That no compensation shall be allowed for the above services when the emoluments of the office of which said designated depositary is in commission amounts to the maximum compensation fixed by law; nor shall the amount allowed to any of said designated depositaries for such services, when added to the emoluments of the office of which he is in commission, be more than sufficient to make the maximum compensation fixed by law: And provided further, That the whole allowance to any designated depositary for such services shall not exceed fifteen hundred dollars per annum.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the sum of twenty thousand dollars be and the same is hereby appropriated to meet the allowance which may be made under the provisions of this act.

APPROVED, March 2, 1853.

PUBLIC, XXXI.—An Act to Establish the Territorial Government of Washington.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, from and after the passage of this act, all that portion of Oregon Territory lying and being south of the forty-ninth degree of north latitude, and north of the middle of the main channel of the Columbia river, from its mouth to where the forty-sixth degree of north latitude crosses said river near Fort Walla-Walla, thence with said forty-sixth degree of latitude to the summit of the Rocky Mountains, be organized into and constitute a temporary government by the name of the Territory of Washington: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to affect the authority of the Government of the United States to make any regulation respecting the Indians of said Territory, their lands, property, or other rights, by treaty, law, or otherwise, which it would have been competent to the Government to make if this act had never passed: Provided further, That the title to the land, not exceeding six hundred and forty acres, now occupied as missionary stations among the Indian tribes in said Territory, or that may have been so occupied as missionary stations prior to the passage of the act establishing the Territorial Government of Oregon, together with the improvements thereon, be, and is hereby, confirmed and established to the several religious societies to which said missionary stations respectively belong.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the executive power and authority in and over said Territory of Washington shall be vested in a governor, who shall hold his office for four years, and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the President of the United States. The governor shall reside in said Territory, shall be the commander-in-chief of the militia thereof, shall perform the duties and receive the emoluments of superintendent of Indian affairs; he may grant pardons and remit fines and forfeitures for offenses against the laws of said Territory, and respites for offenses against the laws of the United States until the decision of the President can be made known thereon; he shall commission all officers who shall be appointed to office under the laws of the said Territory, where by law such commissions shall be required, and shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That there shall be a secretary of said Territory, who shall reside therein, and hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed by the President of the United States; he shall record and preserve all the laws and proceedings of the legislative assembly hereinafter constituted, and all the acts and proceedings of the governor in his executive department; he shall transmit one copy of the laws and journals of the legislative assembly within thirty days after the end of each session, and one copy of the executive proceedings and official correspondence semi-annually, on the first days of January and July in each year, to the President of the United States, and two copies of the laws to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, for the use of Congress. And in case of the death, removal, resignation, or absence of the governor from the Territory, the secretary shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to execute and perform all the powers and duties of the governor during such vacancy or absence, or until another governor shall be duly appointed and qualified to fill such vacancy.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the legislative power and authority of said Territory shall be vested in a legislative assembly, which shall consist of a council and house of representatives. The council shall consist of nine members, having the qualification of voters, as hereinafter prescribed, whose term of service shall continue three years. Immediately after they shall be assembled, in consequence of their first election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three classes. The seats of the members of council of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of the first year, of the second class at the expiration of the second year, and of the third class at the expiration of the third year, so that one third may be chosen every year; and if vacancies happen, by resignation or otherwise, the same shall be filled at the next ensuing election. The house of representatives shall, at its first session, consist of eighteen members, possessing the same qualifications as prescribed for members of the council, and whose term of service shall continue one year. The number of representatives may be increased by the legislative assembly, from time to time, in proportion to the increase of qualified voters: Provided, That the whole number shall never exceed thirty. An apportionment shall be made, as nearly equal as practicable, among the several counties or districts, for the election of the council and representatives, giving to each section of the Territory representation in the ratio of its qualified voters, as nearly as may be. And the members of the council and of the house of representatives shall reside in, and be inhabitants of, the district or county or counties for which they may be elected, respectively. Previous to the first election, the governor shall cause a census or enumeration of the inhabitants and qualified voters of the several counties and districts of the Territory to be taken, by such persons and in such mode as the governor shall designate and appoint; and the persons so appointed shall receive a reasonable compensation therefor. And the first election shall be held at such time and places, and be conducted in such manner, both as to the persons who shall superintend such election and the returns thereof, as the governor shall appoint and direct; and he shall at the same time declare the number of members of the council and house of representatives to which each of the counties or districts shall be entitled under this act; and the governor shall, by his proclamation, give at least sixty days' previous notice of such apportionment, and of the time, places, and manner of holding such election. The persons having the highest number of legal votes in each of said council districts for members of the council, shall be declared by the governor to be duly elected to the council, and the persons having the highest number of legal votes for the house of representatives shall be declared by the governor to be duly elected members of said house: Provided, That in case two or more persons voted for shall have an equal number of votes, and in case a vacancy shall otherwise occur in either branch of the legislative assembly, the governor shall order a new election; and the persons thus elected to the legislative assembly shall meet at such place and on such day within ninety days after such elections as the governor shall appoint. But thereafter the time, place, and manner of holding and conducting all elections by the people, and the apportioning the representation in the several counties or districts to the council and house of representatives, according to the number of qualified voters, shall be prescribed by law, as well as the day of the commencement of the regular session of the legislative assembly: Provided, That no session in any one year shall exceed the term of sixty days, except the first session, which shall not exceed one hundred days.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That every white male inhabitant above the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of said Territory at the time of the passage of this act, and shall possess the qualifications hereinafter prescribed, shall be entitled to vote at the first election, and shall be eligible to any office within the said Territory; but the qualifications of voters and of holding office at all subsequent elections shall be such as shall be prescribed by the legislative assembly: Provided, That the right of suffrage and of holding office shall be exercised only by citizens of the United States above the age of twenty-one years, and those above that age who shall have declared on oath their intention to become such, and shall have taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and the provisions of this act: And provided further, That no officer, soldier, seaman, mariner, or other person in the army or navy of the United States, or attached to troops in the service of the United States, shall be allowed to vote in said Territory, by reason of being on service therein, unless said Territory is, and has been for the period of six months, his permanent domicil: Provided further, That no person belonging to the army or navy of the United States shall ever be elected to or hold any civil office or appointment in the said Territory.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the legislative power of the Territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States. But no law shall be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil; no tax shall be imposed upon the property of the United States; nor shall the lands or other property of non-residents be taxed higher than the lands or other property of residents. All the laws passed by the legislative assembly shall be submitted to the Congress of the United States, and, if disapproved, shall be null and of no effect: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to give power to incorporate a bank or any institution with banking powers, or borrow money in the name of the Territory, or to pledge the faith of the people of the same for any loan whatever, directly or indirectly. No charter granting any privileges of making, issuing, or putting into circulation any notes or bills in the likeness of bank notes, or any bonds, scrip, drafts, bills of exchange, or obligations, or granting any other banking powers or privileges, shall be passed by the legislative assembly; nor shall the establishment of any branch or agency of any such corporation, derived from other authority, be allowed in said Territory; nor shall said legislative assembly authorize the issue of any obligation, scrip, or evidence of debt by said Territory, in any mode or manner whatever, except certificates for service to said Territory. And all such laws, or any law or laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act, shall be utterly null and void. And all taxes shall be equal and uniform; and no distinction shall be made in the assessments between different kinds of property, but the assessments shall be according to the value thereof. To avoid improper influences which may result from intermixing in one and the same act such things as have no proper relations to each other, every law shall embrace but one object, and that shall be expressed in the title.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That all township, district, and county officers not herein otherwise provided for shall be appointed or elected in such manner as shall be provided by the legislative assembly of the Territory of Washington.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That no member of the legislative assembly shall hold or be appointed to any office which shall have been created, or the salary or emoluments of which shall have been increased while he was a member, during the term for which he was elected and for one year after the expiration of such term; but this restriction shall not be applicable to members of the first legislative assembly; and no person holding a commission or appointment under the United States shall be a member of the legislative assembly, or shall hold any office under the government of said Territory.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the judicial power of said Territory shall be vested in a supreme court, district courts, probate courts, and in justices of the peace. The supreme court shall consist of a chief justice and two associate justices, any two of whom shall constitute a quorum, and who shall hold a term at the seat of government of said Territory annually, and they shall hold their offices during the period of four years and until their successors shall be appointed and qualified. The said Territory shall be divided into three judicial districts, and a district court shall be held in each of said districts by one of the justices of the supreme court at such times and places as may be prescribed by law; and the said judges shall, after their appointments, respectively reside in the districts which shall be assigned them. The jurisdiction of the several courts herein provided for, both appellate and original, and that of the probate courts and of justices of the peace, shall be as limited by law: Provided, That justices of the peace shall not have jurisdiction of any case in which the title to land shall in any wise come in question, or where the debt or damages claimed shall exceed one hundred dollars; and the said supreme and district courts, respectively, shall possess chancery as well as common-law jurisdiction. Each district court, or the judge thereof, shall appoint its clerk, who shall also be the register in chancery, and shall keep his office at the place where the court may be held. Writs of error, bills of exception, and appeals, shall be allowed in all cases from the final decisions of said district court to the supreme court, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law; but in no case removed to the supreme court shall trial by jury be allowed in said court. The supreme court, or the justices thereof, shall appoint its own clerk, and every clerk shall hold his office at the pleasure of the court for which he shall have been appointed. Writs of error and appeals from the final decisions of said supreme court shall be allowed, and may be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, in the same manner and under the same regulations as from the circuit court of the United States, where the value of the property, or the amount in controversy, to be ascertained by the oath or affirmation of either party, or other competent witness, shall exceed two thousand dollars, and in all cases where the constitution of the United States, or acts of Congress, or a treaty of the United States, is brought in question; and each of the said district courts shall have and exercise the same jurisdiction in all cases arising under the constitution of the United States and the laws of said Territory, as is vested in the circuit and district courts of the United States; writs of error and appeal in all such cases shall be made to the supreme court of said Territory the same as in other cases. Writs of error, and appeals from the final decisions of said supreme court, shall be allowed and may be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States in the same manner as from the circuit courts of the United States, where the value of the property, or the amount in controversy, shall exceed two thousand dollars, and each of said district courts shall have and exercise the same jurisdiction in all cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, as is vested in the circuit and district courts of the United States; and also of all cases arising under the laws of said Territory, and otherwise. The said clerk shall receive in all such cases the same fees which the clerks of the district courts of the Territory of Oregon receive for similar services.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed an attorney for said Territory, who shall continue in office for four years and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the President, and who shall receive the same fees and salary as is provided by law for the attorney of the United States for the Territory of Oregon. There shall also be a marshal for the Territory appointed, who shall hold his office for four years and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the President, and who shall execute all processes issuing from the said courts when exercising their jurisdiction as circuit and district courts of the United States; he shall perform the duties, be subject to the same regulation and penalties, and be entitled to the same fees, as are provided by law for the marshal of the Territory of Oregon, and shall, in addition, be paid the sum of two hundred dollars annually as a compensation for extra services.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the governor, secretary, chief justice, and associate justices, attorney, and marshal, shall be nominated, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appointed by the President of the United States. The governor and secretary to be appointed as aforesaid shall, before they act as such, respectively take an oath or affirmation before the district judge, or some justice of the peace in the limits of the said Territory duly authorized to administer oaths and affirmations by the laws in force therein, or before the chief justice or some associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, to support the Constitution of the United States, and faithfully to discharge the duties of their respective offices, which said oaths, when so taken, shall be certified by the person before whom the same shall have been taken; and such certificates shall be received and recorded by the said secretary among the executive proceedings; and the chief justice and associate justices, and all other civil officers in said Territory, before they act as such, shall take a like oath or affirmation before the said governor or secretary, or some judge or justice of the peace of the Territory who may be duly commissioned and qualified, which said oath or affirmation shall be certified and transmitted by the person taking the same to the secretary, to be by him recorded as aforesaid; and afterwards the like oath or affirmation shall be taken, certified and recorded in such manner and form as may be prescribed by law. The governor shall receive an annual salary of fifteen hundred dollars as governor, and fifteen hundred dollars as superintendent of Indian affairs. The chief justice and associate justices shall each receive an annual salary of two thousand dollars. The Secretary shall receive an annual salary of fifteen hundred dollars. The said salaries shall be paid quarter-yearly, from the dates of the respective appointments, at the Treasury of the United States; but no such payment shall be made until said officers shall have entered upon the duties of their respective appointments. The members of the legislative assembly shall be entitled to receive three dollars each per day during their attendance at the session thereof, and three dollars each for every twenty miles' travel in going to and returning from said session, estimated according to the nearest usually-traveled route. And a chief clerk, one assistant clerk, a sergeant-at-arms, and doorkeeper, may be chosen for each house; and the chief clerk shall receive five dollar per day, and the said other officers three dollars per day, during the session of the legislative assembly; but no other officers shall be paid by the United States: Provided, That there shall be but one session of the legislative assembly annually, unless on an extraordinary occasion the governor shall deem it expedient and proper to call the legislature together. There shall be appropriated annually the sum of fifteen hundred dollars, to be expended by the governor, to defray the contingent expenses of the Territory, including the salary of a clerk of the executive department; and there shall also be appropriated annually a sufficient sum, to be expended by the secretary of the Territory, and upon an estimate to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, to defray the expenses of the legislative assembly, the printing of the laws, and other incidental expenses; and the governor and secretary of the Territory shall, in the disbursement of all moneys intrusted to them, be governed solely by the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and shall, semi-annually, account to the said Secretary for the manner in which the aforesaid sums of money shall have been expended; and no expenditure, to be paid out of money appropriated by Congress, shall be made by said legislative assembly for objects not specially authorized by the acts of Congress making the appropriations, nor beyond the sums thus appropriated for such objects.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That the laws now in force in said Territory of Washington by virtue of the legislation of Congress in reference to the Territory of Oregon, which have been enacted and passed subsequent to the first day of September, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, applicable to the said Territory of Washington, together with the legislative enactments of the Territory of Oregon, enacted and passed prior to the passage of, and not inconsistent with, the provisions of this act, and applicable to the said Territory of Washington, be and they are hereby, continued in force in said Territory of Washington until they shall be repealed or amended by future legislation.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That the legislative assembly of the Territory of Washington shall hold its first session at such time and place in said Territory as the governor thereof shall appoint and direct; and at said first session, or as soon thereafter as they shall deem expedient, the legislative assembly shall proceed to locate and establish the seat of government for said Territory at such place as they may deem eligible; which place, however, shall thereafter be subject to be changed by said legislative assembly. And the sum of five thousand dollars, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, is hereby appropriated and granted to said Territory of Washington, to be there applied by the governor to the erection of suitable buildings at the seat of government.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That a delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States, to serve for the term of two years, who shall be a citizen of the United States, may be elected by the voters qualified to elect members of the legislative assembly, who shall be entitled to the same rights and privileges as have been heretofore exercised and enjoyed by the delegates from the several other Territories of the United States to the House of Representatives; but the delegate first elected shall hold his seat only during the term of the Congress to which he shall be elected. The first election shall be held at such time and places, and be conducted in such manner, as the governor shall appoint and direct; of which, and the time, place, and manner of holding such elections, he shall give at least sixty days' notice by proclamation; and at all subsequent elections the time, places, and manner of holding the elections shall be prescribed by law. The person having the greatest number of votes shall be declared by the governor to be duly elected, and a certificate thereof shall be given accordingly. The delegate from said Territory shall be entitled to receive the same per diem compensation and mileage at present allowed the delegate from the Territory of Oregon.

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That all suits, plaints, process, and proceedings, civil and criminal, at law and in chancery, and all indictments and informations, which shall be pending and undetermined in the courts established within and for said Territory of Oregon, by act of Congress entitled "An act to establish the territorial government of Oregon," approved August fourteen, one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight, wherein the venue in said cases, suits at law, or in chancery, or criminal proceedings, shall be included within the limits hereinbefore declared and established for the said Territory of Washington; then, and in that case, said actions so pending in the supreme or circuit courts of the Territory or Oregon shall be, by the clerks of said courts, duly certified to the proper courts of said Territory of Washington; and thereupon said causes shall, in all things concerning the same, be proceeded on, and judgments, verdicts, decrees and sentences rendered thereon, in the same manner as if the said Territory had not been divided. All bonds, recognizances, and obligations of every kind whatsoever, valid, under the existing laws, within the limits of said Territory of Oregon, shall be held valid under this act, and all crimes and misdemeanors against the laws now in force within the said limits of the Territory of Washington, may be prosecuted, tried, and punished in the courts established by this act, and all penalties, forfeitures, actions, and causes of action, may be recovered and enforced, under this act, before the supreme and circuit courts established by this act as aforesaid: Provided, That no right of action whatever shall accrue against any person for any act done in pursuance of any law heretofore passed by the legislative assembly of the Territory of Oregon, and which may be declared contrary to the Constitution or laws of the United States.

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That all justices of the peace, constables, sheriffs, and other judicial and ministerial officers, who shall be in office within the limits of said Territory of Washington when this act shall take effect, shall be and they are hereby authorized and required to continue to exercise and perform the duties of their respective offices, as officers of said Territory, until they or others shall be duly elected or appointed, and qualified, to fill their places in the manner herein directed, or until their offices shall be abolished.

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That the sum of five thousand dollars be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended, by and under the direction of the governor of Washington, in the purchase of a library, to be kept at the seat of government for the use of the governor, legislative assembly, judges of the supreme court, secretary, marshal, and attorney of said Territory, and such other persons and under such regulations as shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That, until otherwise provided for by law, the governor of said Territory may define the judicial districts of said Territory, and assign the judges who may be appointed for said Territory to the several districts, and also appoint the times and places for holding courts in the several counties or subdivisions in each of said judicial districts by proclamation, to be issued by him; but the legislative assembly, at their first or any subsequent session, may organize, alter, or modify such judicial districts, and assign the judges, and alter the times and places of holding the courts, as to them shall seem expedient and proper.

SEC. 19. And be it further enacted, That all officers to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for the Territory of Washington, who by virtue of the provisions of any law of Congress now existing, or which may be enacted during the present session of Congress, are required to give security for moneys that may be intrusted with them for disbursement, shall give such security at such time and place, and in such manner, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That when the lands in said Territory shall be surveyed, under the direction of the Government of the United States, preparatory to bringing the same into market, or otherwise disposing thereof, sections numbered sixteen and thirty-six in each township in said Territory shall be, and the same are hereby, reserved for the purpose of being applied to common schools in said Territory. And in all cases where said sections sixteen and thirty-six, or either or any of them, shall be occupied by actual settlers prior to survey thereof, the county commissioners of the counties in which said sections so occupied as aforesaid are situated, be and they are hereby authorized to locate other lands to an equal amount in sections or fractional sections, as the case may be, within their respective counties in lieu of said sections so occupied as aforesaid.

SEC. 21. And be it further enacted, That the Territory of Oregon and the Territory of Washington shall have concurrent jurisdiction over all offenses committed on the Columbia river, where said river forms a common boundary between said Territories.

APPROVED, March 2, 1853.

PUBLIC, XXXII.—An Act authorizing the Selectmen of the Town of Chelsea, in the State of Massachusetts, to lay out and make a way on Lands of the United States in said town.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the selectmen of the town of Chelsea, in the State of Massachusetts, be and they are hereby authorized and empowered to lay out and make a way or street, not exceeding fifty feet in width, over the lands of the United States, situated in Chelsea, in said Commonwealth, north of the marine hospital; said way or street to connect the east end of Third street with the west end of Middlesex street, in the village of Chelsea: Provided, That said right of way can, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be granted without prejudice to the public interests; and if hereafter said way shall be discontinued, the right hereby granted shall revert to the United States.

The assistant treasurer of the United States in New York shall be treasurer of the said assay office, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall, with the approbation and consent of the President of the United States, appoint such other officers and clerks, and authorize the employment of such assistants, workmen, and servants as shall be necessary for the proper conduct and management of the said office and of the business pertaining thereto, at such compensation as shall be approved by the President: Provided, That the same shall not exceed that allowed for corresponding services under existing laws relating to the Mint of the United States and its branches.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the owner or owners of any gold or silver bullion, in dust or otherwise, or of any foreign coin, shall be entitled to deposit the same in the said office, and the treasurer thereof shall give the receipt, stating the weight and description thereof in the manner and under the regulations that are or may be provided in like cases or deposits at the Mint of the United States with the treasurer thereof. And such bullion shall, without delay, be melted, parted, refined, and assayed, and the net value thereof, and of all foreign coins deposited in said office, shall be ascertained; and the treasurer shall thereupon forthwith issue his certificate of the net value thereof, payable in coins of the same metal as that deposited, either at the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States, in New York, or at the Mint of the United States, at the option of the depositor, to be expressed in the certificate, which certificates shall be receivable at any time within sixty days from the date thereof in payment of all debts due the United States at the port of New York for the full sum therein certified. All gold or silver bullion and foreign coin deposited, melted, parted, refined, or assayed, as aforesaid, shall, at the option of the depositor, be cast in the said office into bars, ingots, or disks, either of pure metal or of standard fineness, (as the owner may prefer,) with a stamp thereon of such form and device as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, accurately designating its weight and fineness: Provided, That no ingot, bar, or disk shall be cast of less weight than five ounces, unless the same be of standard fineness, and of either one, two, or three ounces in weight. And all gold or silver bullion and foreign coin intended by the depositor to be converted into the coins of the United States, shall, as soon as assayed and its net value certified as above provided, be transferred to the Mint of the United States, under such directions as shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury, and at the expense of the contingent fund of the Mint, and shall then be coined. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, with the approval of the President of the United States, to make the necessary regulations for the adjustment of the accounts between the respective officers, upon the transfer of any bullion or coin between the assay office, the Mint, and assistant treasurer of New York.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That the operations of melting, parting, refining, and assaying in the said office shall be under the general directions of the director of the Mint, in subordination to the Secretary of the Treasury; and it shall be the duty of the said director to prescribe such regulations and to order such tests as shall be requisite to insure faithfulness, accuracy, and uniformity in the operations of the said office.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That the laws of the United States for the government of the Mint and its officers in relation to the receipt, payment, custody of deposits, and settlement of accounts, the duties and responsibilities of officers and others employed therein, the oath to be taken, and the bond and sureties to be given by them (as far as the same may be applicable) shall extend to the assay office hereby established, and to its officers, assistants, clerks, workmen, and others employed therein.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That the same charges shall be made and demanded at the said assay office for refining, parting, casting into bars, ingots, or disks, and for alloy, as ore, or shall be made and demanded at the Mint; and no other charges shall be made to depositors than by law are authorized to be made at the Mint; and the amount received from the charges hereby authorized shall be accounted for and appropriated for defraying the contingent expenses of the said office.

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to procure, by rent, lease, or otherwise, a building or apartments in the city of New York suitable for the operations of said office, unless he shall be of opinion that suitable apartments in the custom-house of that city may be assigned for that purpose. And he is also hereby authorized and directed to procure the necessary machinery and implements for carrying on the operations and business of the said office.

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That the salary of assistant treasurer of the United States in New York, from and after the time that the said office shall be opened and in operation, shall be six thousand dollars per annum, instead of the sum now allowed.

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That under the act for the benefit of Amos Proctor, approved the seventeenth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and forty-four, the legal representatives of said Proctor are entitled to one half of one moiety, being one fourth of the appraised value of the goods therein mentioned, as having been seized and libeled on his information.

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That there be placed at the disposal of the President of the United States the sum of twenty thousand dollars, to enable him to compensate Clark Mills for the execution of the equestrian statue of Andrew Jackson, recently placed upon the public square in the city of Washington, north of the Executive Mansion, and to make the same the property of the United States, and that said sum be paid under the direction of the President out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, when a clear and satisfactory title to said statue shall be vested in the United States: Provided, That the sum of ten thousand dollars thereof be invested for the family of said Mills, and after his death to be given to such children of said Mills as may survive him.

SEC. 19. And be it further enacted, That whenever the land office at Pontotoc, Mississippi, shall be discontinued, the records and files thereof shall be placed in the possession of the clerk of the United States district court for the northern district of Mississippi, who is hereby made keeper of the same, and authorized to perform all the duties now conferred upon the register and receiver, and shall receive for his services therefor a sum not exceeding five hundred dollars per annum.

SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That in settling the accounts of Daniel S. McCauley, late consul general at Alexandria, in Egypt, there shall be allowed for office rent at the rate of four hundred dollars per annum, during the time he acted in that capacity, to be paid to his widow.

For salaries of governor and superintendent of Indian affairs, three judges, attorney, and marshal of Washington Territory, from the time of their appointment to the end of the fiscal year terminating June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, an amount sufficient to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

For compensation and mileage of the members of Legislative Assembly, officers, clerk, and contingent expenses of the Assembly, and to defray the expenses of taking the census of said Territory, the sum of twenty thousand dollars, to be paid out of any money not otherwise appropriated.

For the contingent expenses of the Territory, including the salary of a clerk of the executive department, fifteen hundred dollars, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

APPROVED, March 3, 1853.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be and they are hereby authorized to adjust and settle the claims of the State of Florida for the services of her troops under the act of February twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, by the provisions stated for the settlement of the claims of the State of Georgia for like services, as prescribed by the act approved thirty-first of August, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the army for the year ending thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-three;" and that the Secretary of War be authorized to distribute the arms provided for by the act of Congress of eighteen hundred and eight to the State of Iowa according to her representation in Congress.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be directed to report to Congress whether, in his opinion, it would not be more economical, proper, and advisable to cause all the arms of the United States to be made by contract.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That such portion of the sum of seventy-five thousand dollars appropriated for the discharge of claims for preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities in Florida by the act of twenty-seventh February, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, as shall remain unexpended on the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, is hereby reappropriated for that purpose.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the seventh section of the act approved August thirty-first, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the army for the year ending the thirtieth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three," shall be construed to extend to all persons who are engaged as receivers of military contributions in Mexico or California, during the war with Mexico.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the first section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the army for the year ending the thirtieth of June, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one," approved September twenty-eight, eighteen hundred and fifty, granting extra pay to the officers and enlisted men of the army serving in Oregon and California, be extended to the officers and men of two companies of regiment of mounted riflemen that garrisoned the post of Fort Laramie, Oregon route, during the time they occupied said post; and the amount which may be found due them under this act shall be paid out of any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War cause to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Richard B. Lee, late commissary of the Pacific division of the army, the sum of eleven hundred and seventy-five dollars, with interest from the ninth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty, being for money lost in being transported from Honolulu to San Francisco, under his charge, and for which he has accounted to the Department, and which sum includes the expenses incurred in efforts to recover the same.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That for the settlement of the remaining unpaid claims of the States of Georgia and Alabama, for advances made in suppressing Indian hostilities, the Secretary of the Treasury pay to the State of Georgia her claims now remaining unpaid for moneys paid by the State in suppressing hostilities of the Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Indians, in the year eighteen hundred and thirty-five, and since, upon proof that the same was paid by the State; and that the provisions of the act of Congress relative to the settlement of the claims of Georgia for military services, approved March third, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, be extended to the payments to be made under this act. And that the Secretary of the Treasury pay to the State of Alabama, under the provisions of the acts of Congress of sixteenth August, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and the twenty-sixth January, eighteen hundred and forty-nine, the balance due the said State growing out of the Creek Indian hostilities of eighteen hundred and thirty-six and eighteen hundred and thirty-seven: Provided, Proof is made that said State advanced in good faith the amount claimed.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That whenever any lieutenant of the corps of engineers, corps of topographical engineers, or ordnance corps, shall have served fourteen years continuous service as lieutenant, he shall be promoted to the rank of a captain: Provided, That the whole number of officers in either of said corps shall not be increased beyond the number now fixed by law: And provided further, That no officer shall be promoted before those who rank him in his corps.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, under the direction of the President of the United States, to employ such portion of the corps of topographical engineers, and such other persons as he may deem necessary, to make such explorations and surveys as he may deem advisable, to ascertain the most practicable and economical route for a railroad from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean, and that the sum of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expense of such explorations and surveys.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the engineers and other persons employed in said explorations and surveys shall be organized in as many distinct corps as there are routes to be surveyed, and their several reports shall be laid before Congress on or before the first Monday in February, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That in the adjustment of the account of the State of Virginia, under the twelfth section of the act approved thirty-first August, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to follow the provisions of the act of second of June, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, providing for the refunding to the several States the amounts expended by them in raising regiments of volunteers for the Mexican war.

SEC. 13. And be further enacted, That the lot of land in the town of New Castle, in the State of Delaware, upon which an arsenal has been erected, and the said arsenal be, and the same are hereby, reconveyed and granted to the trustees of the said town and their successors.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of enabling the commissioners of the military asylum to purchase a suitable site with the view of establishing thereat a Western military asylum, the sum of ten thousand dollars, in addition to the sum in the hands of the commissioners, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

APPROVED, March 3, 1853.

PUBLIC, XXXVII.—An Act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending the thirtieth of June, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be and he is hereby authorized to change the location of the land offices in the several land districts established by law, and to establish the same from time to time at such point in the district as he may deem expedient.

APPROVED, March 3, 1853.

PUBLIC, XLVI.—An Act to provide for the Survey of the Public Lands in California, the Granting of Preëmption Rights therein, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the surveyor general for the district or State of California, who is now, or may hereafter be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall keep his office at such place as the President, in view of the public convenience, shall from time to time direct; and the surveyor general, if he has not already done so, and his successors in office, before entering upon duty, shall take and subscribe an oath or affirmation before a judge of a United States court, or other competent officer, to support the Constitution of the United States, and faithfully discharge the duties of his office, and give bond in the same amount as the other surveyors general, the penalty thereof to be increased whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall deem proper. He shall be entitled to receive a salary at the rate of four thousand five hundred dollars per annum, payable quarter-yearly, to commence from the time of entering into bond.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That there shall be allowed for clerk hire in the office of the surveyor general, the sum of eleven thousand dollars per annum, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the salary of no clerk shall exceed the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars per annum, and for office rent, fuel, and other incidental expenses of his office, such sums as shall be found necessary by the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding the sum of ten thousand dollars. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cause an official seal to be prepared for the office of the said surveyor general; and any copy of or extracts from the plats, field notes, and other records and documents on file in his office, when attested as such, by the said seal, and the signature of the surveyor general, shall in all judicial matters, have the same force and effect as the originals.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said surveyor general shall have the same power and authority, and perform the same duties respecting the public lands and private claims in the State of California, as by laws appertain to and are required of the surveyor general in Louisiana, except so far as the same may be modified by this act. He shall engage a sufficient number of skillful surveyors as his deputies, whom he shall cause to survey, measure, and mark base and meridian lines through such points, and perpetuated by such monuments, and such other correction, parallels and meridians as may be prescribed, and also to survey and establish the other lines of the public lands. He shall also cause all private claims to be surveyed after they have been confirmed, so far as may be necessary to complete the surveys of the public lands; and in the location and survey of them, he shall have the same power and authority as are conferred on the land officers of Louisiana by the sixth section of the act of third of March, eighteen hundred and thirty-one, creating the office of the surveyor general for that State; and for surveying the base and meridian lines, and private claims, and meandering navigable waters, the deputy surveyor shall be allowed not exceeding sixteen dollars per mile; and for surveying the other lines of the public lands, there shall be paid not exceeding an average of twelve dollars per mile: Provided, That none other than township lines shall be surveyed when the lands are mineral or are deemed unfit for cultivation; and no allowance shall be made for such lines as are not actually run and marked in the field, and were actually necessary to be run.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That if, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, it shall be advisable, he is hereby authorized to direct such surveys after what is known as the geodetic method. And whenever, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, a departure from the rectangular mode of surveying and subdividing the public lands would promote the public interests, he may direct such change to be made in the mode of surveying and designating the said lands as he may deem proper, with reference to the existence of mountains, mineral deposits, and the advantages derived from timber and water privileges: Provided, That such lands shall not be surveyed into less than one hundred and sixty acres, or subdivided into less than forty acres.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register of the land office and receiver of public moneys for the State of California, at such time as, in his judgment, the public interest may demand, with a salary each of three thousand dollars per annum, payable quarter yearly; and the land office shall be located at such place as the President, in view of the public convenience, shall from time to time direct; and previously to entering on the duties of their offices, they each shall take and subscribe an oath or affirmation, before one of the judges of the United States courts, or other competent officer, to support the Constitution of the United States, and faithfully to discharge the duties of their respective offices, and shall give bond in the same amount as other registers and receivers of the public land offices; and their general duties and responsibilities shall be the same as other officers of like character: Provided however, That at such time or times as in his judgment the public interest may so imperatively require, and in the absence of any further and special legislation of Congress on the subject, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to divide the State of California into two or three separate and distinct land districts, as circumstances shall determine to be necessary, embracing, respectively, the upper and lower, or the upper, middle, and lower portions of the State; and he shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or during the recess of Congress when necessary, a register of the land office and receiver of public moneys for each of such land districts; and the land offices for the same respectively shall be located at, and be removed from time to time to, such places as the President shall deem most suitable for public convenience.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That all the public lands in the State of California, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, with the exception of sections sixteen and thirty-six, which shall be and hereby are granted to the State for the purposes of public schools in each township, and with the exception of lands appropriated under the authority of this act or reserved by competent authority, and excepting also the lands claimed under any foreign grant or title and the mineral lands, shall be subject to the preëmption laws of fourth September, eighteen hundred and forty-one, with all the exceptions, conditions, and limitations therein, except as is herein otherwise provided; and shall, after the plats thereof are returned to the office of the register, be offered for sale, after six months' public notice in the State of the time and place of sale under the laws, rules, and regulations now governing such sales, or such as may be hereafter prescribed: Provided, That where unsurveyed lands are claimed by preëmption, the usual notice of such claim shall be filed within three months after the return of the plats of surveys to the land offices, and proof and payment shall be made prior to the day appointed by the President's proclamation for the commencement of the sale including such lands, the entry of such claims to be made by legal subdivisions, according to the United States survey, and in the most compact form: And provided further, That the fact of persons having heretofore had the benefit of said act of the fourth of September, eighteen hundred and forty-one, shall interpose no bar to their obtaining the benefit of this act; and all of said lands that shall remain unsold after having been proclaimed and offered, shall be subject to entry at private sale as other public land, and at the same minimum price per acre; and the register and receiver shall not be entitled to any percentage or fees, except for deciding preëmption cases, when each of them shall not be allowed the same fees as are paid to other like officers; but the receiver shall be entitled to his actual necessary expenses going and returning in making his deposits: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize any settlement to be made on any public lands not surveyed unless the same be made within one year from the passage of this act; nor shall any right of such settlers be recognized by virtue of any settlement or improvement made of such unsurveyed lands subject to that day: And provided further, That this act shall not be construed to authorize any settlement to be made on any tract of land in the occupation or possession of any Indian tribe, or to grant any preëmption right to the same.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That where any settlement, by the erection of a dwelling house or the cultivation of any portion of the land, shall be made upon the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, before the same shall be surveyed, or where such sections may be reserved for public uses or taken by private claims, other lands shall be selected by the proper authorities of the State in lieu thereof, agreeably to the provisions of the act of Congress approved on the twentieth of May, eighteen hundred and twenty-six, entitled "An act to appropriate lands for the support of schools in certain townships and fractional townships, not before provided for," and which shall be subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior. And no person shall make a settlement or location upon any tract or parcel of land selected for a military post, or within one mile of such posts, or on any other lands reserved by competent authority; nor shall any person obtain the benefits of this act by a settlement or location on mineral lands.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the public lands, not being mineral lands, occupied as towns or villages, shall not be subdivided, or subject to sale, or to be appropriated by settlers, under the provisions of this act; but the whole of such lands, whether settled upon before or after the survey of the same, shall be subject to the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the relief of the citizens of towns upon the lands of the United States, under certain circumstances," approved May twenty-third, eighteen hundred and forty-four, except such towns as are located on or near mineral lands, the inhabitants of which shall have the right of occupation and cultivation only until such time as Congress shall dispose of the same; nor shall any lands specially reserved for public uses be appropriated under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That whenever the public surveys, or any portion of them, authorized by this act, or by the act approved September twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and fifty, entitled "An act to create the office of surveyor general of the public lands in Oregon, and to provide for the survey and to make donations to settlers of the said public lands," are so required to be made, as to render it expedient to make compensation for the surveying thereof by the day, instead of by the mile, it shall be lawful for the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to make such fair and reasonable allowance as, in his judgment, shall be necessary to insure the accurate and faithful execution of the work.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That, except where the President of the United States shall see cause otherwise to determine, each officer to be appointed in virtue of this act, and also every other like officer of the United States, may continue in the uninterrupted discharge of his regular official duties, and is hereby authorized accordingly so to act, after the day of expiration of his official commission, and until a new commission shall be issued to him for the same office, or otherwise, until the day when a successor shall enter upon the duties of such office; and the existing official bond of any such officer so acting, shall be deemed and held to be good and sufficient, and in force until the date of the approval of a new bond to be given by him if recommissioned, or otherwise, for the additional time wherein he may so continue officially to act, pursuant to authority hereof. And the provision as to bonds to be given by deputy surveyors for the faithful execution of their duties, in a penalty of double the estimated amount of money accruing to them under their surveying contracts, as required by the act of March third, eighteen hundred and thirty-one, entitled "An act to create the office of surveyor general of the public lands for the State of Louisiana," referred to in the third section of this act, shall be and the same is hereby made applicable to public surveys in the State of California; and the sufficiency of the sureties to all such bonds shall be approved and certified by the proper surveyor general; and the same provision is hereby extended to all other branches of the public surveying service elsewhere; and all such bonds heretofore required of deputy surveyors, according to usage in the surveying service, shall be deemed and held to be of the same validity as if the same had been required by law. And it is hereby made the duty of each of the respective surveyors general of the public lands of the United States, so far as is compatible with the desk duties of his office, occasionally to inspect the surveying operations while in progress in the field, sufficiently to satisfy himself from actual inspection, of the fidelity of the execution of the work according to contract, and the actual and necessary expenses incurred by him while so engaged, shall be allowed; and where it is incompatible with his other duties, for a surveyor general to devote the necessary to make a personal inspection of the work in progress, then he shall be and hereby is authorized to depute a confidential agent to make such examination; and the actual and necessary expenses of such person shall be allowed and paid for that service, and five dollars per day during the examination in the field: Provided, That such examination shall not be protracted beyond thirty days, and in no case longer than is actually necessary; and when a surveyor general, or any person employed in his office at a regular salary, shall be engaged in such special service, he or they shall only receive his necessary expenses in addition to his regular salary.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to cause to be provided for the office of the surveyor general of Oregon a seal, with such device as shall be deemed suitable, and copies of any papers on file in his office which may be authenticated by him under said seal, shall be evidence in all cases in which the originals would be evidence; and from and after the passage of this act the salary of said surveyor shall be three thousand five hundred dollars per annum.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That the quantity of two entire townships, or seventy-two sections, shall be, and the same is hereby, granted to the State of California, for the use of a seminary of learning, said lands to be selected by the Governor of the State, or any person he may designate for that purpose, in legal subdivisions of not less than a quarter section of any of the unsold, unoccupied, and unappropriated public lands therein, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and to be disposed of as the Legislature shall direct: Provided, however, That no mineral lands, or lands reserved for any public purpose whatever, or lands to which any settler may be entitled under the provisions of this act, shall be subject to such selection.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That there shall be, and is hereby, granted to the State of California the quantity of ten entire sections of land, for the purpose of erecting the public buildings of that State, said lands to be selected by the Governor, or any person he may designate, in legal subdivisions of not less than a quarter section of any of the unsold, unoccupied, and unappropriated public lands in that State, and subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, however, That none of said selections shall be made of mineral lands or lands reserved for any public purpose whatever, or lands to which any settler may be entitled under the provisions of this act.

APPROVED, March 3, 1853.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be authorized and required to establish a mail between Bainbridge and Appalachicola.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all railroads and parts of railroads which are now or hereafter may be in operation be, and the same are hereby, declared to be post roads; and the Postmaster General may contract for carrying the mails thereon according to existing laws.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow the postmaster at Richmond, Virginia, and the postmaster at Cleveland, Ohio, the same commission on all mailable matter distributed at their respective offices as is allowed by law to the postmasters of the other distributing offices; such allowance to date from the first day of June, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That hereafter, as the office of Assistant Postmaster General, or either of them, shall be vacated, the appointment of his successor shall be made by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That from and after the first day of April next, in place of the compensation now allowed deputy postmasters, the Postmaster General be, and is hereby, authorized to allow them commissions at the following rates on the postage collected at their respective offices, in each quarter of the year, and in due proportion for any period less than a quarter, viz: on any sum not exceeding one hundred dollars, fifty per cent.; but any postmaster, at whose office the mail is to arrive regularly between the hours of nine o'clock at night and five o'clock in the morning, may be allowed sixty per cent. on the first hundred dollars; on every sum over and above one hundred dollars, but not exceeding four hundred dollars, forty per cent.; on every sum over and above four hundred dollars, but not exceeding twenty-four hundred dollars, thirty-five per cent.; on every sum exceeding twenty-four hundred dollars, fifteen per cent. And on the amount of postage on letters and packages received at a distributing office for distribution may be allowed ten per cent. Every postmaster whose compensation shall not exceed five hundred dollars in one quarter, shall be allowed one cent for every free letter delivered out of his office, excepting such as are for the postmaster himself. But the special allowance now made by law to the postmaster at New Orleans and Washington city shall not otherwise be either increased or diminished. Each postmaster who shall be required to keep a register of the arrival and departure of the mails shall be allowed ten cents for each monthly return which he makes to the Postmaster General. Each postmaster may be allowed two mills for delivery from his office to a subscriber of each newspaper not chargeable with postage: Provided, That the commissions and allowances hereby authorized shall be subject to the provisions of the forty-first section of the act entitled "An act to reduce into one the several acts establishing and regulating the Post Office Department," approved March the third, eighteen hundred and twenty-five.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall forge or counterfeit any postage stamp printed or impressed upon any letter envelope authorized by the eighth section of an act entitled "An act to establish certain post roads, and for other purposes," approved August thirty-first, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, or by any other act, or who shall counterfeit any die, plate, or engraving therefor, or who shall make or print, or knowingly use or sell, or have in his possession with intent to use or sell, any such false, forged, or counterfeited die, plate, engraving, or stamped envelope, or who shall make or knowingly use or sell or have in his possession with intent to use or sell, any paper bearing the water mark of such letter envelopes, or any fraudulent imitation thereof, or who shall make or print, or authorize or procure to be made or printed, any stamped or printed letter envelope of the kind provided by the Postmaster General under the authority aforesaid, without the especial direction of the Post Office Department, or who, after such letter envelopes have been prepared or printed, shall, with intent to defraud the revenues of the Post Office Department, deliver any such letter envelopes to any person or persons other than such as shall be authorized to receive the same by instrument of writing, duly executed under the hand of the Postmaster General and the seal of the Post Office Department, shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of felony, and be punished by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of every postmaster to cause to be defaced, in such manner as the Postmaster General may direct, all letter envelopes with postage stamps thereon which may be deposited in his office for conveyance in the mail; and if any postmaster sending such envelopes in the mail shall omit to deface the same, it shall be the duty of the postmaster to whose office such envelopes shall be sent for delivery to deface them, and report the delinquent postmaster to the Postmaster General. And if any person shall use, or attempt to use, for the conveyance of any letter or other mailable matter or thing, over any post road of the United States, either by mail or otherwise, any such stamped letter envelope which has been before used for a like purpose, such person shall be liable to a penalty of fifty dollars, to be recovered, in the name of the United States, in any court having competent jurisdiction.

APPROVED, March 3, 1853.

PUBLIC, XLVIII.—An Act to authorize the Correction of Erroneous Locations of Military Bounty Land Warrants by Actual Settlers on the Public Lands in certain cases.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That where an actual settler on the public lands has sought or shall hereafter attempt to locate the land settled on and improved by him, with a military bounty land warrant, and where, from any cause, an error has occurred in making such location, said settler shall be authorized to relinquish the land so erroneously located, and to locate such warrant upon the land so settled upon and improved by him, if the same shall then be vacant, and if not, upon any other vacant land, in making proof of those facts to the satisfaction of the land officers, according to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and subject to his final adjudication.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the act of third March, eighteen hundred and nineteen, "providing for the correction of errors in making entries of land at the land offices," and of the act of twenty-fourth May, eighteen hundred and twenty-eight, supplementary to said act of third March, eighteen hundred and nineteen, shall be, and the same are hereby, made applicable to errors in the location of land warrants.

APPROVED, March 3, 1853.

PUBLIC, XLIX.—An Act to provide for Additional Clerks, and extend the Sessions of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico shall hereafter have authority to employ one person as a translator and interpreter, and two clerks in addition to the number they are now authorized to employ for each House during their session; and that the accounts and charges for said translator and interpreter and clerks shall be audited and settled in the same manner and upon the same principle as is provided by law for auditing and settling the accounts and charges of other and similar officers and attendants of said Assembly.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That of the four clerks to be employed in each House of said Assembly, two shall be qualified to write in the Spanish and two in the English language.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the accounts and charges of the translator and interpreter, and the extra clerks which were employed in each House during the last session of said Assembly, shall be audited and allowed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and paid in the same manner and upon the same principle as is provided by law for the auditing and paying of the accounts of other and similar officers and attendants of said Assembly.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the said Legislative Assembly shall hereafter be authorized to continue their sessions for a term not exceeding sixty instead of forty days, as heretofore provided.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That said Legislature of New Mexico shall cause to be allowed the commissioners heretofore appointed to draft a code of laws such compensation as may be just and reasonable, and which, when so allowed, shall be paid out of the funds appropriated to defray the expenses of said Territory.

APPROVED, March 3, 1853.

PUBLIC, L.—An Act to Appropriate Lands for the Support of Schools in certain Townships and fractional Townships in the Territory of Minnesota, not before provided for.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in those townships and fractional townships in the Territory of Minnesota where sections numbered sixteen and thirty-six, or either of them, directed to be reserved for school purposes by the eighteenth section of the act approved third of March, one thousand eight hundred and forty-nine, entitled "An act to establish the Territorial Government of Minnesota," shall be found fractionally in quantity, and in those or fractional townships where no section sixteen or thirty-six shall be found therein, there shall be reserved and appropriated other land for such school purposes, to make up, in the first case, the deficiency in the quantity of said fractional sections sixteen and thirty-six, or either of them, and to give, in the second case, an equivalent for the loss of either or both said sections: Provided, That the mode and manner of selection and approval in both cases, and the quantity selected in the second case, shall be in accordance with the principles settled by the act approved twentieth May, eighteen hundred and twenty-six, entitled "An act to appropriate lands for the support of schools in certain townships and fractional townships not before provided for."

APPROVED, March 3, 1853.

PUBLIC, LI.—An Act authorizing the Governor of the Territory of New Mexico to call an Extra Session of the Legislative Assembly of said Territory, should the same be deemed necessary and expedient.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Governor of the Territory of New Mexico, should he deem the same necessary and expedient, be and he is hereby authorized and empowered to call one extra session of the Legislative Assembly of said Territory, not to exceed ninety days in duration, anything to the contrary notwithstanding which may be contained in the act approved September ninth, eighteen hundred and fifty, entitled "An act proposing to the State of Texas the establishment of her northern and western boundaries, the relinquishment by said State of all territory claimed by her exterior to said boundaries, and of all her claims upon the United States, and to establish a Territorial Government for New Mexico:" Provided, Said extra session shall not be held during the sitting of any regular session of said Legislative Assembly: And provided further, That said extra session shall be held and concluded prior to the first Monday of December, eighteen hundred and fifty-three.

APPROVED, March 3, 1853.

PUBLIC, LII.—An Act to revive and continue in force for a limited time the provisions of an act relative to Suspended Entries of Public Land.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the several provisions of the act approved third August, eighteen hundred and forty-six, entitled "An act providing for the adjustment of all suspended preëmption land claims in the several States and Territories," be and the same are hereby revived and continued in force for the term of ten years from the date hereof, and those provisions are hereby declared applicable as well to cases which were inadvertently omitted to be acted on under said act, as to those of a like character and description which have arisen between the date of said act and the present time, and shall be regarded as applying to locations by bounty land warrants, as well as to ordinary entries or sales.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in all cases were patents have been issued on entries which were entitled to be confirmed under said act, such patents may be surrendered, and the officers at the time of such surrender, who by said act are constituted the board of adjudication; are hereby authorized and empowered to confirm such entries; and upon the cancelling of the outstanding patent, the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized to issue a new patent, on such confirmation, to the persons who made such entries, to their heirs or to their assigns.

APPROVED, March 3, 1853.

PUBLIC, LIII.—An Act authorizing the Sale of certain Reserved Lands in Alabama.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the lands lying in Clarke county, in the State of Alabama, which have been reserved from sale as cedar lands, under and by virtue of "An act making reservation of certain public lands to supply timber for naval purposes," approved March first, eighteen hundred and seventeen, shall hereafter be liable to be sold in the same manner and under the same provisions and restrictions as other public lands of the United States.

APPROVED, March 3, 1853.

PUBLIC RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the third section of an act entitled "An act supplementary to an act providing for the taking of the seventh and subsequent censuses of the United States, and to fix the number of the members of the House of Representatives, and provide for their future apportionment among the several States," approved twenty-third May, eighteen hundred and fifty, be so construed that no allowance as compensation be made to any person for constructive or any other services rendered as Secretary to the Census Board after the first day of June, eighteen hundred and fifty.

APPROVED, December 23, 1852.

[No. 2.]—Joint Resolution authorizing the settlement of the Account of the Public Printer, for paper used by him since the first of November, eighteen hundred and fifty-two.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the accounts of the Public Printer, for paper furnished and used by him since the expiration of the time specified in the sixth section of the "Act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-three," and also for the paper to be furnished and used by him until the Superintendent of the Public Printing shall commence furnishing and delivering to him paper to be used for the public printing, be settled and paid as the accounts of the Public Printer have been settled and paid, under the said sixth section of said act, and as is provided for in said sixth section.

APPROVED, December 23, 1852.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That so much of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors and rivers," approved August thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, as relates to Red River, be so construed as to authorize the Secretary of War to award the contract for the removal of obstructions to the navigation of said river occasioned by the raft, to the person or persons who, for the amount of the appropriation, will agree to remove said obstructions, and keep said navigation free from the same for the longest period of time; said contract to be awarded after reasonable public notice.

APPROVED, January 7, 1853.

[No. 4.]—A Resolution in relation to the Census Returns from the State of California.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be required to append the census returns of the State of California, made by that State, to the report thereof, now in course of preparation at the Census Office.

APPROVED, January 7, 1853.

[No. 5.]—A Resolution allowing in certain cases to the owners of Steamers further time to make the necessary preparations to bring their vessels within the provisions of an Act entitled "An Act to amend an Act entitled 'An Act to provide for the better Security of the Lives of Passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes,'" approved August thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-two.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That any inspector of steamers, appointed under the act aforesaid, if not furnished seasonably with the necessary means of discharging his duty, or who shall be satisfied when an enrolled, licensed, or registered steamer is inspected by him, and found deficient in the requirements made by said act, that such omissions are not occasioned by any fault or neglect of the owner or master, he may grant, upon application therefor, or of his own accord, such further reasonable time after said act goes into effect, as he may deem sufficient with due diligence to make all necessary preparations to make any such vessel, her machinery and equipment, conform to the provisions of said act: Provided, The time so allowed shall in no case exceed ninety days after the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-three.

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That no such vessel so allowed further time for preparation, shall be liable to seizure or to any penalty under said act during the time specified, for any deficiency intended to be covered by the extension of time granted by such inspector.

APPROVED, January 7, 1853.

[No. 6.]—A Resolution for the Appointment of Regents in the Smithsonian Institution.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class "other than members of Congress," be filled by the appointment of Alexander Dallas Bache, a member of the National Institute, and resident in the City of Washington, and John MacPherson Berrien, of the State of Georgia.

APPROVED, January 13, 1853.

[No. 7.]—A Resolution Explanatory of the Appropriation for the Improvement of the Mouth of the Sekonk River and Harbor of Providence, Rhode Island.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the clause in the "Act making appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors and rivers," approved thirtieth of August, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, making an appropriation "for removing a rock near the mouth of the Sekonk River, harbor of Providence, Rhode Island," be construed to authorize the removal of any rock or other obstructions at the crook or the entrance or mouth of Sekonk River, harbor of Providence, and State of Rhode Island.

APPROVED, January 20, 1853.

[No. 8.]—A Resolution to provide for straightening the Eastern Boundary Line of the Naval Hospital lands at New York.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and empowered, on the part of the United States, to carry into full effect an arrangement made with the coterminous proprietors, whereby a certain part of the eastern boundary of the lands of the Naval Hospital at New York is straightened, as will appear by reference to a map, signed by the said proprietors and the commissioners for running the said line, on the twenty-eighth of November, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, and approved by the Secretary of the Navy on the eighteenth of December, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, so that without any pecuniary consideration from the one to the other, the slips of land on the south and west sides of said line, according to said plan, shall become the property of the United States, and so much on the other side as now belongs to the United States shall become the property of the abutting proprietors respectively.

APPROVED, March 2, 1853.

[No. 9.]—A Resolution in Amendment of a Joint Resolution relating to the duties of Inspectors of Steamers, approved the seventh day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-three.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall be the duty of the inspectors of steamers to exercise the powers conferred upon them by a joint resolution of Congress, approved the seventh day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, subject to all the restrictions and limitations therein contained: Provided, That the time granted to applicants shall in no case extend beyond the first day of June next.

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That the said inspectors may approve of boilers and steam pipes made prior to the first day of July next, and subsequent to the passage of the act approved the thirtieth of August, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled an act to provide for the better security of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes," if the same be not made with stamped iron: Provided, It shall appear that stamped iron could not be seasonably procured.

SEC. 3. And be it further resolved, That the said inspectors shall hereafter be authorized and empowered, upon satisfactory proof that the owner or owners of a steamer are unable to obtain seasonably, or upon reasonable terms, a metallic lifeboat, as required by said act, or that such a boat is unsuited to the navigation in which a steamer is employed, to accept in any such case a substitute or substitutes for such metallic life-boat: Provided, Such substitute shall in their judgment afford safe and suitable means of preserving life in case of accident.

SEC. 4. And be it further resolved, That no person interested as patentee, in any way, direct or indirect, in life-preservers, life-boats, or any other article required for steamers by the law of August thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, aforesaid, shall be deemed competent to hold the office of inspector or to discharge the duties thereof.

APPROVED, March 3, 1853.

[No. 10.]—A Resolution for the Relief of the Spanish Consul and other subjects of Spain, residing at New Orleans, and of subjects of Spain residing at Key West, by indemnity for losses occasioned in the year eighteen hundred and fifty-one.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to cause an investigation to be made of any losses that may have been sustained by the Consul of Spain and other persons residing at New Orleans or at Key West, in the year eighteen hundred and fifty-one, and who, at that time, were subjects of the Queen of Spain, by the violence of individuals arising out of intelligence then recently received at those places, of the execution of certain persons at Havana, in Cuba, by the Spanish authorities of that Island, and that such losses, so ascertained, to persons at that time subjects as aforesaid, on the certificate of the Secretary of State, that the same are proven to the satisfaction of the President, together with the reasonable costs of the investigation, shall be paid to those entitled, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

APPROVED, March 3, 1853.

[No. 11.]—A Resolution providing for the Printing and Binding of the "Returns of the Seventh Census."

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be printed by the Public Printer, under the supervision of the Superintendent of the Public Printing, so much of the abstract of the "returns of the Seventh Census" as is recommended to be printed by the report of the Select Committee of the Senate, made June twenty-eight, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, and in the manner therein prescribed, (the "History and Statistics of the State of Maryland, according to the 'returns of the Seventh Census' of the United States," with the alterations recommended by the committee, being taken as the sample,) that is to say:

First. Omit the "Historical Account," the "History and Description of Counties," the "Sketch of Geology," and the remarks with the heading "Population" (of the State of Maryland) prefixed to the tabular statements, embracing twenty-two pages, from one to twenty-two, both inclusive, with the exception of the tabular statement at page twenty, showing the progress of population from seventeen hundred and ninety to eighteen hundred and fifty, which shall be retained.

Second. Insert the tabular statements of population covering from page twenty-three to page twenty-six, both inclusive.

Third. Omit the tabular statements from page twenty-seven to page thirty, both inclusive, and substitute tables showing the nativity of the inhabitants of the State, without reference to local residence, giving the sex and color, similar to the table headed "Recapitulation," at page thirty-five.

Fourth. Omit the tables relating to the deaf, dumb, blind, insane, and idiotic, occupying from page thirty-one to page thirty-four, both inclusive; retain the table headed "Recapitulation," on page thirty-five, and omit that headed "Manumitted and fugitive slaves," on the same page; retain the table headed "Professions, occupations, and trades," on page thirty-six, and tables headed "Agricultural productions," on pages thirty-seven and thirty-eight.

Fifth. Omit the tables of "Industrial establishments," from page thirty-nine to page sixty-two, both inclusive.

Sixth. Omit tables headed "Real and personal estate and taxes," "Wages," and "Pauperism and crime," on pages sixty-three and sixty-four; omit the column which professes to give the "Private libraries," in the statement headed "Libraries," retaining the residue, and retaining, also, the statement headed "Newspapers and periodicals," on page sixty-four, and the statements headed "Education" and "Churches," on pages sixty-five to sixty-eight, both inclusive.

Seventh. Omit medical statistics, life-tables, etc., to the end of the work.

Eighth. There shall be prepared and published tabular statements, showing the population alone in the local subdivisions of States less than counties, such as towns, townships, hundreds, etc., wherever the returns are sufficient, for their formation.

Ninth. The condensed tables for the United States, shall conform to the alterations suggested in the detailed tables for the States.

Resolved, further, That there be printed, in addition to the number usually ordered of the public documents, seven thousand copies for the use of the Senate and ten thousand copies for the use of the House of Representatives: Provided, That the cost of composition for plain matter shall not exceed the sum of sixty-two and a half cents per thousand ems, the cost of composition for tabular statements shall not exceed the sum of seventy cents per thousand ems, and the cost of press-work shall not exceed the sum of forty-four and sixty-five one hundredths cents per thousand quarto pages.

Resolved further, That the entire work hereinbefore ordered shall be printed in a compact quarto form, upon paper measuring not less than twenty-six by thirty-eight inches, weighing forty-eight pounds to the ream of four hundred and eighty sheets, and of the quality now used for the extra copies of documents ordered to be printed by Congress; the type to be used to be brevier, except for the headings of the several columns of the tabular statements, the notes, and such tables as will not appear to advantage in brevier, which shall be printed in nonpareil; and that, in all other respects, except those hereinbefore specified, the work shall be executed according to the provisions of the act entitled "An act providing for executing the public printing, and establishing the prices thereof, and for other purposes," approved August twenty-sixth, eighteen hundred and fifty-two.

Resolved further, That the binding of the work hereinbefore mentioned shall be executed under the direction of the respective committees on printing for each House, and shall be paid for out of the contingent fund of the two Houses of Congress, as is now prescribed by law.

APPROVED, March 3, 1853.
